GOOSEBERRY. † n. s. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce. Dr. Johnson. — This may surely be termed a ludicrous etymology. Yet Mr. Pegge, noticing the Latin word for a gooseberry, viz. grossula, (and he might have added our northern word grosier, says, it is certainly big, or great, in comparison with the currant or currant-berry, as they call it in Kent; wherefore it may be a corruption of gooseberry, which would be more easily received on account of its use as the sauce already named! Anonym. Cent. viii. 79.—I think the goose-sauce may be easily given up, if it be only observed that goss is another word in our language for gorse, or furze, which has prickles like the gooseberry-tree; gorge, Saxon, the blackberry bush; and thus gooseberry may be goss berry or thorn berry. See Goss.] A berry and tree. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The red hairy gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry. 5. Fulham holds. Shakespeare.

GO'RDIAN.† adj. [from Gordius, a Phrygian husbandman, made king by the oracle of Apollo; who is said to have then tied up his utensils of husbandry in the temple, and in a knot so intricate that no one could find out where it began or ended. It was pretended, that whoever should loose this knot, should be king of all Asia. Alexander the Great, without staying to untie it, cut it with his sword. The Latin nouns gordianus, or gordian knot, was hence adopted to express any difficult matter; and has passed into our language.] Intricate; difficult.

Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare, A. Hen. V.
As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard.

The binding knot of the late Gordon conspiracy. Proc. against Garnet, &c. sign. S. s. 3.
Strange power of home, with how strong-twisted arms.

And Gordian-tied knot, dost thou enchain me!
F. Fletcher, Pœnia.

What power, what force, what mighty spell, if not
Your learned hands can loose this Gordian knot?

Milton, Vac. Ec.
Close the serpent's m.

Insinuating, wore with Gordian twine

GO'SPEL† n. s. [gōspēl, Sax. God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον, Greek; soiset, skol, schach, happy tidings, Euseb.]

1. The glad tidings of the actual coming of the Messiah; and hence the evangelical history of Christ.

What the word evangelium in Greek, which we render gospel, signifies among authors, is ordinarily known, viz. from εὐ and αγγέλιον, good news, or good tidings. Thus the angel speaks of the birth of Christ, ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ δοκ κατα αυτου, I bring you good tidings of great joy, i. e. very joyful good tidings. Only in this sacred use of it, there seems to be a metonymy, or figure very ordinary, whereby the word which signifies good news, is set to denote the history of their good news, the birth, and life, and resurrection of Christ, which all put together is that joyful news of good tidings.—And so this word gospel, or by evangelium, in Wickliffe's translation, and ever since, notes these good tidings; as first by an angel; and after that, by the apostles by word of mouth; so here in writing, by way of history also; and in brief signifies that blessed story of the birth, life, actions, precepts, and promises, death, and resurrection of Christ, which, of all other stories in the world, we Christians ought to look on with most joy, as an evangelium or good word, i. e. a gospel.

Hammond on the Gospels, Annot. 1.

2. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first began. Waller.

All the decrees whereby Scripture treateth, are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobatum.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Benley.

3. Divinity; theology.

Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw. Milton, Sonnet to Cromwell.

4. Any propagator of this political gospel are in hopes their abstract principle would be overlooked.

Burke.

GOTH. * n. s. [Lat. Gothus; old French, Goth; Sax. Lot; from Gothia, or Gothland.]

1. One of the people in the northern parts of Europe, first called Getes, afterwards Goths.

There are considerable reasons to persuade us, that the Getes and Goths, who were of Armanian original, made their incursions out of the northern parts of Asia, through Sarmatia, into Scandia and other regions of Europe, where they settled themselves.

Abdetti. Hist. l. 5. 307.
 Not very solicitous whether originally a Goth or a Celt.
Compellit. Lat. Hist. of Ireland, p. 72.

The Goths [spoken of by Hickee, in his remarks on the Mæso-Gothick language] were those who inhabited Mæssa, not far from the northern borders of Greece, a tract of country now comprehended in Turkey; whose language, with different dialects, probably extended over all the north of Europe, nearly in the same latitude, from the coast of Norway to the Black Sea.

2. One not civilized; one deficient in general knowledge; a barbarian.

I look upon these writers as Goths in poetry.

Addison, Spect. No. 62.

What do you think of the late extraordinary event in Spain? Could you have ever imagined, that those ignorant Goths would have dared to banish the Jesuits?
Lord Chesterfield.

GO'THAMIST. * n. s. [from the old saying, "As wise as a man of Gotham;" a place in Nottinghamshire formerly, it is feigned, noted for some pleasant blunders; whence a man of Gotham denoted a simple person. See Grose's Local Proverbs.] One who is not wise.

As those who were in this case, even so the Romish writers have been defective in uttering of their meaning concerning the same speech of Christ, that they have merited, like to the former Gothomists, to be dismissed with laughter for speaking so foolishly.

By. Morion. Duck. of Imputed. &c. (1633.) p. 123.

GO'THICAL. * adj. [old Fr. gothique, from GO'THICK.] Goth.

1. Respecting the country or language of the Goths.

In which box were certain scrolls of parchment written with Gothical characters, but containing Casilian verses, which comprehended many of his acts.
Shelton, Dion. Quir. iv. 24.

Francis Junius published those precious fragments of the ancient Teutonic language, [the fragments of the Mæso-Gothick gospels,] under the name of Uplia, a Gothick bishop in Mæssa.

M. Shelton, Tr. of Wotton's View of Hickee, p. 200.

Dr. Hickee points out a very striking feature of resemblance in the similar pronunciation of ge when in contact, by observing that, in this situation, the first g had in the Mæso-Gothick, the sound of n, as it has in the Greek. This he exemplifies in the Gothick verb gegan, to go, which, he tells us, from such pronunciation produced the Saxon verb gegan.

2. Denoting a particular kind of architecture, distinguished by the terms ancient and modern, the heavy or light; the former being that which the Goths brought with them from the north in the fifth century, which is very coarse and massive; the latter being introduced about the tenth century, which runs into the other extreme of delicacy and lightness, and is sometimes called arabesque. See ARABESQUE.

There is nothing in this city [Sienna] so extraordinary as the cathedral, which can only be looked upon as one of the master-pieces of Gothick architecture.

Addison on Italy.

York-minster I look upon to be the criterion, according to which the beauties or defects of every Gothic church are to be estimated.

Shelton, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

3. Rude; uncivilized.

Ab! rustic ruder than Gothic.
Congreve.

GO'THICK. * n. s. The Gothick language.

Besides Wormius, Veretius, and Guldmann Andree, there are very few that have professedly treated the ancient Gothick.

Prof. to Struass's Sweet. and Eng. Dict. 3d ed. 1757.

GO'THICISM. * n. s. [from Gothick.]

1. A Gothick idiom.

This peculiarity Mr. Sibbald, the chronicler of the Scottish poetry, in his zeal for Gothicism, has endeavoured to derive from an unknown character (B) in the Gothic Gospels of Uplifia, which were written in the fourth century.

Chalmers on the Language of Sir D. Lindsay.

2. Conformity to Gothick architecture.

I am glad you enter into the spirit of Starchitecture in it, it has a purity and propriety of Gothicism in its style.

Gray, Letters.

3. The state of barbarians.

Night, Gothicism, confusion, and absolute Chaos are come again.
Shelton.

TO GO'THICIZE. * v. a. [from Gothick.] To bring back to barbarism.

The language and manners of the higher ranks are not gothicized.
Strutt, Queen-Hall Hall.

GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold.

Job, xlviii. 15.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it.

Temple.

GOUD. n. s. Woad; a plant.

Dict.

GOVE. n. s. A mow.

Tusser.

TO GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gow, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair, Goe just in the barn, it is out of despair.
Tusser.

TO GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernō, Latin.].

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.
Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern them. Wallen.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are, govern all things in times of peace.

Downam.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.

Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her.

Shakespeare, L. Lear.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax; as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,
 And let this your lesson be,
 In our language evermore
 Words do that govern go before.

Manger, Fr. Gram.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

TO GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,

Your wicked actions may be working now
 To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.

Dryden.

GOVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.

Lodge.

GOVERNANCE. n. s. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas.
1 Mac. ix. 31.

2. Control, as that of a guardian.

He knew not, neither his own ill,
 Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
 I him reuced to a better will.
 What! shall heavy Henry be a pupil still,
 Under the surly Gloucester's governance?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He liked it to fall into mischance
 That is regardless of his governance.

Spenser, Muirpoems.

GOVERNANT. † n. s. [gouvernante, Fr.].

A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

I saw Easy there dressed up in a widow's veil, and the very picture of the quarrel of one of your noblemen's houses.

Tr. of George's Via. p. 38.

GO'VERNES. n. s. [gouverneuse, old Fr., from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
 Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
 That rheumatic diseases do abound.

Shakespeare.

2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Dauid is painted, which she suddenly saw the golden shewer.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them.

Clarendon.

3. A tutress; an instructress; a directress.

Great affliction that serves governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she serves on.

Mere against Atheism.

GOVERNMENT. n. s. [gouvernement, Fr.].

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders, or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself: the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute.

Lalcy.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall find
 Their government, and their great senate above
 Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.

Milton, P. L.

While he survives, in concord and content
 The commons live, by no divisions rent;
 But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

3. Administration of public affairs.

Safety and equal government are idios
Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shows greatness, courage, blood,

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain.

'Tis government that makes them seem so divine;
The want thereof makes them abominable.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Their eyes' windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part deriv'd of supple government,
Stall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I then ward'd all with wary government.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GOVERNOUR. n. s. [gouverneur, French.]
1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governor of the world by providence, all are partakers.

They begot in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governor of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience; as, for instance, if my governor should command me to do a thing, of I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governor,
Remains the censure of this belch'd villain.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Elkanah will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor.

The great work of a governor is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governors and courtiers.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

GOUGE. n. s. [French.] A chisel having a round edge, for the cutting of such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed.

TO GOUGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To scoop out with a gouge or chisel.

In my next step 'long, 'hove there thousand pound,
With'to that term; by gouging of 'em out
Just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing.

GOUGEERS. † n. s. [from gouge, French, a camp trull.] The French disease.

The gougeers shall devour them, flesh and fell, Shakespeare, Ant. & Cleo.

GOULAND. n. s. A flower.
Pinks, goulands, king-cups, and sweet sopran-wine.

GOULARD. n. s. An extract of lead, so called from M. Goulard, the inventor of it, used as a remedy for inflammations, bruises, sprains, and the like.

GOURD. † n. s. [gourde, French.]
1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped.

But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,
Each plant, and juicy gourd, will pluck such choice
To entertain our angel-guest.

Gourd seeds abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French. Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer.

3. An instrument of gaming. See GORD.

GOULDINESS. n. s. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey.

GO'URMAND. n. s. [French. See GORMAND. Written also gurmard, and are also the derivatives, gurmardize.] A glutton; a greedy eater.

This gurmard sacrifices whole hockstombs to his paunch.

With difficulty I return to what remains of this ignoble task, for the disdain I have to change a period more with the filth and venom of this gurmard, swelled into a confinder.

TO GO'URMANDIZE. v. n. [from gurmard.] To play the glutton. See TO GORMANDIZE.

GO'URMANDIZE. n. s. [from gurmard.] Gluttony; voraciousness.

A tiger forth out of the wood did rise,
That with fell claws, full of fierce gurmardize,
And greedy mouth wide gaping like hell gate,
Did roo at Pastorell, her to surprise.

Lacedemon, whence gurmardize, drunkenness, luxury, dissolution, avarice, envy, and ambition were banished.

Summary of Du Bartas, (1621,) P. ii. p. 54.

GO'URNET. n. s. [euculus.] A fish.

GOUT. n. s. [goutte, French.]

1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the lowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme.

One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather Grown so in perplexity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician death.

This very 'ere' tend lecher, gille was with
With rheumatisms, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done,
And swinges his own vice in his soo.

2. A drop. [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

I see thee still;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gout of blood,
Which was not so before.

GOUT. n. s. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word.

Catalogues serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies.

GOUT-SWOLLEN. adj. [gout and swollen.] Inflamed with the gout.

The best lies low —
Quoth old Eudemus, when his gout-swollen fist
Gropes for his double deucat in his chist.

GO'UTWORT. n. s. [gout and wort, podagrarica.] An herb.

GO'UTY. adj. [from gout.]

1. Afflicted or diseased with the gout.

The sickly ladie, and the gouty peere,
Still would I haunt, that love their life so deare.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die.

Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found.

Most commonly a gouty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and the other extrinsecities, being delicate.

2. Relating to the gout.

There are likewise other causes of blood-spitting; one is the settlement of a gouty matter in the substance of the lungs.

3. Boggy; as, gouty land.

4. Swelled.

This humour in historians hath made the body of ancient history in some parts so gaily and monstrous.

GO'UTINESS. n. s. [from gout.] The pain of the gout.

GOWD. n. s. A gaud; a toy; whence gowdica, play-things. Used in the north of England. See GAUD.

GOWK. n. s. [Teut. gauch.] A foolish fellow; and also a cuckoo. See GAWK.

Such giddy-headed gowds.

To GOWK. v. a. [Teut. gauch, a fool; whence a goker, or gawky. See GAWK.] To stupefy.

Nay, look how the man stands as he were gaw'd!

To GOWL.* v. n. [Icel. goela.] To howl, by Wicliffe, Obsoleto. See To HOWL, and To YELL.
GOWN. n. s. [gonna, Ital; gwen, Welsh and Erse.]

1. A long upper garment.

They make garments either short, as cloaks, or, as gowns, long to the ground.

Abbot, Description of the World.

If ever I said a loose bodied gown, wear up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread; I said a gown.

Shakespeare, Tum. of the Shrew.

In length of train descends her sweeping gown, And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known.

Dryden.

2. A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, till I see you dressed in it.

Pope.

3. The long habit of a man dedicated to acts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish countries, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for any honied minister, scarcely to buy him a gown.

Spenser on Ireland.

Girt in his Gabin gown the hero sat.

Dryden, Æn.

Yet not superior to her sex's care,
The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and china she's the last append;
In these great points she leads the commonwealth.

4. The dress of peace.

He Mars depend'd, and arms to gowns made yield;

Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field.

Dryden.

GO'WNED.† adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.

A noble crew about them waited round
Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Well might the gowned Romans fear when Pompey fled. Sp. Taylor, Scen. (1651.) p. 215.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around.

Dryden.

GO'WNMAN. n. s. [gown and man.] A man devoted to the acts of peace; one whose proper habit is a gown.

Let him with pedants
Pore out his life amongst the lazy governance.

Rome.

Thus will that whole bench, in an age or two,
Be compos'd of mean, fawning gownmen, dependants upon the court for a morsel of bread.

Swift.

GO'WNSMAN.* n. s. An academical phrase of modern times for a member of the university, at least of Oxford; formerly gownman.

These were all the gownmen that I knew above 80 years old in Oxford.

Sp. Lloyd to Dr. Charlett, (1710), Arb. L. i. 208.

If townsmen by our influence are so enlightened, what must we gownmen be ourselves!

GO'ZZARD.* n. s. [a corruption of goose-herd.] One who tends geese: used in the north of England, and perhaps elsewhere, Mr. Malone says: In Lincolnshire, Mr. Pegge says, but in the meaning of a fool.

GRAB.* n. s. A vessel peculiar to the Malabar coast; having usually two masts, but sometimes three.

To GRABBLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.]

1. To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.

My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grubbing in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails.

Arminius, John Bull.

2. To lie prostrate on the ground.

Ainsworth.

3. To grapple, in the west of England.

Grose.

GRACE.† n. s. [grace, French; gratia, Latin; gracia, Erse.]

1. Favour; kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity.

Sidney.

O momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God.

Shakespeare.

Such as were popular,

And well deserving, were advanced by grace.

Daniel.

Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately passed?

King Charles.

Yet those remor'd,

Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relicts, not to blot out mankind.

Milton, P. L.

He received all the graces and degrees, the procuratorship and the doctorship could be obtained there.

Clarendon.

Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may will deserve

Dryden, Fab.

None of us, who now your grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before.

Dryden.

Proffer'd service I repaid the fair,
That of her grace she gave her maid to know

Dryden.

2. Favourable influence of God on the human mind.

In simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world.

2 Cor. i. 12.

The evil of sin is that we are especially to pray against, most earnestly begging of God, that he will, by the power of his grace, preserve us from falling into sin.

Duty of Man.

Preventive grace descending had remor'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh

Milton, P. L.

3. Virtue; effect of God's influence.

Within the church, in the public profession and external communion thereof, are contained persons truly good and sanctified, and hereafter saved; and together with them other persons void of all saving grace, and hereafter to be damned.

Puritan.

How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit.

Pope.

4. Pardon; mercy.

Noble pity held

His hand a while, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace.

the first word of the Latin prayer, "Gratias Tibi agimus." Wicliffe uses graces for thanks, St. Mark, xiv.]

Your soldiers use him as the grace fore most,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

Our excess of modesty makes us shamed in all the exercises of piety and devotion. This humour prevails upon us daily; inasmuch, that at many well-brad tables the master of the house is so very modest a man that he has not the confidence to say grace at his own table; a custom which is not only practised by all the nations about us, but was never omitted by the heathens themselves.
Addison, Spect. No. 458.

While grace is saying after me, do you and your brethren take the chairs from behind the company. Swift.

Then cheerful healths, your mistresses shall have place;
And what's more rare, a poet shall say grace. Pope.

GRACEFUL. n. s. [grace and cup.] The cup or health drunk after grace.
The grace-cup is drunk, the cloth away,
Jove thought it time to shew his play. Prior.

To GRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To adorn; to dignify; to embellish; to recommend; to decorate.

This they study, this they practise, this they grace with a wanton superfluity of wit. Hooker.

I do not think a braver gentleman,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter age with noble deeds. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Little of this great world can I speak,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself. Shakspeare, Othello.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled. Bacon.

Rich crowns were on their royal scutcheon
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd. Dryden.

By both his parents of decent divine;
Great Jove and Phœbus grac'd his noble line. Pope.

Though triumph were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too. Pope.

2. To dignify or raise by an act of favour.
He writes
How happily he lives, how well-belov'd,
And daily graced by the emperor. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

He might at his pleasure grace or disgrace whom he would in court. Kneller.

Dispose all honours to the sword and gun,
Grace with a nod, and ruin with a frown. Dryden, Jus.

3. To favour.
Please it your highness
To grace us with your royal company. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When the guests withdrew,
Their courteous host, saluting all the crew,
Regards pass'd her o'er, not grac'd with kind adieu. Dryden.

4. To supply with heavenly grace.
Grace the disobedient. Br. Ital. it. 50.

GRACEFUL. adj. [from grace.]
1. Beautiful; graceful. Not in use.

He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best graced men that ever I saw, being of a middle age and a mean stature. Sidney.

2. Virtuous; regular; chaste. Not in use.
Epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GRACEFUL. adj. [from grace.]

1. Full of grace and virtue. Not now in use.

You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman, against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Beautiful with dignity.
Amid the troops, and like the leading god,
High o'er the rest in arms, the graceful Turnus rode. Dryden.

Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance;
Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance. Pope.

Yet graceful ease, and sweetest voice of pride,
Might hide her faults, if belies had faults to hide.
Pope.

Graceful to sight, and elegant to thought,
The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught.
Young.

GRACEFULLY. adv. [from graceful.] Elegantly; with pleasing dignity.

Through nature and through art the rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd. Swift.

Walking in the mode or manner of man, or of a beast; but walking gracefully implies a manner or mode superadded to that action. Watts, Logic.

GRACEFULNESS. n. s. [from graceful.]
Elegance of manner; dignity with beauty.

Petrarch's Tuscan gracefulfulness,
Or Theban Fœdus's lofty strain,
Hathwell on Providence, p. 256.

His neck, his hands, his shoulders, and his breast,
Did next in gracefulfulness, and beauty, stand
Dryden, Ovid.

He executed with so much gracefulfulness and beauty, that he alone got money and reputation.
Dryden, Dufrenoy.

There is a secret gracefulfulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryd. Ovid, Pref.

He bears are amad's from whence
Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,
Which, though her modesty would shroud,
Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;
While gracefulfulness its art conceals,
And yet through ev'ry motion steals. Swift.

GRACELESS. adj. [from grace.] Void of grace; wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.

This graceful man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady dear. Spenser.

Whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shakspeare.

In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. J. Estrange.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryd.

GRACELESSLY. adv. [from graceless.]
Without elegance.

The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable, saving two called antepenultimas; and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracefully may they use dactyls. Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryd.

GRACELESSNESS. n. s. [from graceless.]
Want of grace; profligacy.

It were loathsome to run over what has been before said of our adversary's insolency and unmannerliness, impudency and gracelessness against the Scriptures. Dr. Fournier, Antiq. Tr. over Nov. (1619), p. 165.

GRACES. n. s. Good graces for favour is seldom used in the singular.

Demand deliver'y of her heart,
Her goods, and elastics, and good graces,
And person, up to his embraces. Hudibras.

He knows that, as a go-between his account in being in the good of wealth.

GRACILE. adj. [gracilis, L.]
small.

GRACILENT. adj. [gracilentus, L.]

GRACILITY. n. s. [gracilitas, gracilitas, Latin.] Slenderness; leanness.

GRACIOUS. adj. [gracius,
1. Merciful; benevolent.

Common sense and reason results from the good and gracious be pleased, nor consequently were thing barbarous or cruel.

To be good and gracious, and ledge, are two of the most amiable

2. Favourable; kind.
And the Lord was gracious un-compassion on them.

Unhail'd Ulysses' home
In which I find receipt so graciously
From now reveal

A gracious beam of light, from My tongue to sing, my head to touch

3. Acceptable; favoured.
Doctrine is much more profitby example than by rule.

He made us gracious before he so that they gave us food.

Goring, who was now genera-no more gracious to prince Ruy-had been.

4. Virtuous; good.
Kings are no less unhappy being gracious, than they are in they have approved their virtues.

5. Excellent. Obsolete.
The grievous abuse which has should rather cause men to study a thing may again be reduced to it

6. Gracious; becoming; solete, Dr. Johnson says the example from Camden usage of this word more the present sense; and it played, in our own time, ablest writers.

A brave child she bare by be-ful gracious, and fair for to be-Chaucer.

There was not such a gracious
Being season'd with a gracious
Shakspeare.

Our women's names are as their Rutilla, that is, red head.
Sallust's expression would be compact: Cicero's more gracious

GRACIOUSLY. adv. [from gracius.]
1. Kindly; with kind con-

His testimony he graciously was best of all my tragedies

He heard my vows, and grace
My grounds to be restor'd, un-feed.

That majesty would but give to find a hardship of this nature consideration.

2. In a pleasing manner.
GRACIOUSNESS. n. s. [from
1. Mercifulness.

Their enemies shall laugh, who have cause to weep, unless the H H 2

vir up some worthy princes of renown, and reputation, with both sides to interpose their wisdom.
See E. Sandys, Study of Religion.

2. Kind condescension and temper of this answer made no impression on them.
Clarendon.

3. Possession of graces or good qualities. These derive their graciousness from the habits.
By. Barlow, Rem. p. 437.

4. Pleasing manner. He possessed some science of graciousness and attraction which books had not taught.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 147.

GRADATION. n. s. [gradation, French; gradus, Latin.]

1. Regular progress from one degree to another. The desire of more and more rises by a natural gradation to most, and after that to all.
L'Entrance.

2. Regular advance step by step. From thence, By cold gradation, and well balance'd form, We shall proceed with Angelo.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

The palmist very elegantly expresses to us the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety.
Tillotson.

3. Order; sequence; series. 'Tis the course of service; Preference goes by letter and affection, Not, as of old, gradation, where each second Stood heir to th' first.
Shakespeare, Othello.

4. Regular process of argument. Certain it is, by a direct gradation of consequences from this principle of merit, that the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety, are derived from the first degrees of nature.
South.

GRADATORY. n. s. [gradatus, Latin.] Steps from the choicest into the church.
Ainsworth.

GRADATORY. adj. [from gradation.] Proceeding step by step. Could we have seen his [Macbeth's] crimes darkening on their progress, till they attain the direct excess of human depravity; could this gradatory apostasy have been shewn us; could the noble and useful moral, which results, have been thus forcibly impressed upon our minds, without a violation of those senseless unities [of time and place]?
Seward, Lett. iii. 243.

GRADE. n. s. [French.] Rank; degree. This word is of modern introduction into our language. And yet the Sax. græde, græd, ordo, was in use. See GRADELY.

GRADELY. adj. Well; handsomely. Lancashire Dialect. Decently; orderly. Craven Dial. In Cheshire, the word is an adjective, denoting a decent, orderly, good sort of man; perhaps, Mr. Wilbraham says, from gradus, Latin. Others cite the Saxon græde, græd, ordo. See Craven Dial and Brockett's N. C. Words.

GRADIENT. adj. [gradients, Lat.] Walking; moving by steps. Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive.
Watts.

GRADUAL. adj. [gradual, Fr.] Proceeding by degrees; advancing step by step; from one stage to another. Of creatures animate with gradual life, Of growth, sense, reason, all sum'd up in man.
Milton, P. L.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, till at length, by many steps and ascents, they come to be at greatest.
South.

GRADUAL. n. s. [gradus, Latin.]

1. An order of steps. Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd, The pavement kiss'd, and thus the saint impair'd.
Dryden.

2. A gail; an ancient book of hymns or prayers. [Fr. graduel.] See GRAIL. GRADUALITY. n. s. [from gradual.] Regular progression. This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light.
Brown.

GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.]

1. By degrees; in regular progression. When the moon paves over the faced stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once.
Newton, Opticks.

The Author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach to wards the end of it.
Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear a great deal of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually.
Arbutnot.

2. In degree. Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastical reason of brutes.
Gree.

TO GRADUATE. v. a. [graduatur, Fr.; gradus, Latin.]

1. To dignify with a degree in the university. John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did good service.
Cornwall, Surv. of Cornwall.

Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a note as if the terms of architects, friezes, and cornices were enough to graduate a master of this art.
Wotton.

2. To mark with degrees. The places were mark'd where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers.
Dehrom.

3. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals: a chemical term. The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold.
Hogbe.

4. To heighten; to improve. Not only virtuous is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyers advance and graduate their colours with salts.
Brown, Fals. Err.

TO GRADUATE. v. n.

1. To take an academic degree; to become a graduate: as, he graduated at Oxford.

2. To proceed regularly, or by degrees. A grand light falls beautifully on the principal figure, but it does not graduate sufficiently into distant parts of the cave.
Gilpin.

GRADUATE. n. s. [graduatur, Fr. graduatus, low Latin, from gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academic degree. I know the arts And sciences do not directer make A graduate in our universities, Than his habitual gravity profess A man in court.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

An oath taken by Oxford graduates [was] that they should not profess at Stamford.
Selden on Drayton's Polyol. p. 5. S.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout, And choose a fensile doctor for the goat.
Bramston.

GRADUATESHIP. n. s. [from graduate.] The state of a graduate. An English concordance, and a topick folio, the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship.
Milton, Areopagitica.

GRADUATION. n. s. [graduation, French; from graduate.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees. The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole.
Cicero.

2. Improvement; exaltation of qualities. Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in iron, and often extinguished in oyl of mars or fire, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fasten'd in a wall.
Brown.

3. The act of conferring academical degrees. The ministers are now reconciled to distinction; and as it must always happen, that some will excel others, have thought graduation a proper testimony of uncommon abilities or acquisitions.

GRAFF. n. s. A ditch; a moat. See GRAYV. Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep.
Clarendon.

GRAFF. n. s. [graff, Fr. Dr. John.]

GRAFF. n. s. son. — Rather from the Sax. græfan, as Lye long since observed, which signifies to dig, to excavate. So also Mr. H. Tooker, Div. of Purley, ii. 376. And see TO GRAFF. A small branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels.
Beigel.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves.
Bacon, Not. Hist.

'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see With insulence invade a foreign tree.
Dryden, Virg.

If you connect the top with clay and horse dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heal the wound.
Mortimer.

Now the cleft rind inserted graff receives, And yields an offspring more than nature gives.
Pope.

TO GRAFF. v. a. [graff, Fr. Dr. John.]

TO GRAFF. v. n. — It is the Saxon verb græfan, to dig; Goth. graban, the same; and Icelandic. grafa.

1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another. His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant; I'll cut his barren branches to the stock, And graff you on to bear.
Dryden, Non Solus.

With his pruning hook disjoin Unbearing branches from their head, And graff more happy in their stead.
Dryden.

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation. Now let me graff my pears, and prune the vine.
Dryden.

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong. And they also, if they bid not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in; for God is able to graff them in again.
Romans, vi. 23.

These are th' Italian names which fate will join
Will, sure, and graft upon the Trojan line.
Dryden, Æn.

4. To impregnate with an adscititious branch.

We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not
Be grafted to your relish. Shakespeare, Coriol.
The noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new kind of graft upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.
May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

To GRAFF. v. n. To practise incision.

In March is good grafting the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow;
From moon being changed, till past be the prime,
For grafting and cropping is very good time.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

GRAFFER.† n. s. [from graft or graft.]
GRAFTER.† One who propagates fruit
by grafting. Huolcot.

Or that the grafter and waterer be notwary—without whose work there should be increase.

Alp. Crooner, Anac. to H. Gardiner, p. 378.
I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the incision is made. Evelyn.

GRAIL.† n. s. [grêle, Fr. from gracidia, Lat. Menage.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweaving was;
And, lying down upon the sandy grass,
Drunk of the stream as clear as crystal glass.

Spenser, F. Q.
The bottom yellow, like the golden groyle,
That bright Pictolus washeth with his streams.
Spenser, Fa. of Belay.

GRAIL.† n. s. [low Latin, graduale, gradale; old French, gred.] A book containing some of the offices of the Roman church.

The groyle is not ayd. Lit. Fest. fol. 35.
Among the books they found there, were one hundred psalters, as many groyles, and forty missals, which undoubtedly belonged to the choir of the church. Watson, Hist. Eng. Poet. vol. 1. Diss. 2.

GRAIN.† n. s. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian; have all the following significations. Dr. Joliuson.— Icel. and Norv. grain, corn, fruits of the earth; from the Su. Goto. gro, to germinate, to grow.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not.
Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
Let there pronounce the steep Tartarian death,
Vagabond exile, staying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and some less than forty.
Motiver.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Phlobus fed his oxen on the plain.

Dryden, Pastorals.
'To a rich soil, I grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain.

As to the other grain, it is to be observed, as the wheat ripened very late, the barley got the start of it, and was ripe first. Burke on the Stourcy.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

By intelligences
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a pennyweight;
and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn;
the weight whereof is therefore called a grain;
which arithmetically, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds.

The trial began about betwixt lead and gold, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air;
the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and alstoth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon.

His brain

Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace.

Hammond.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and submits by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving.

Addison.

I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology. Watts on the Mind.

The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter. [from the Teut.
grænen.]

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare.

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

The tooth of a sea-bee, in the midst of the solider parts, contains a curled grain not to be found in ivory. Brown.

Stones of a constitution so compact, and a grain
so fine, that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.

11. Died or stained substance.

Use the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
Like the pure snow with goodly vermeil stain'd,
And crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser, Epithalam.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than Melibon, or the grain
Of sars, worn by kings and heroes old.

Milton, P. I.
Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestic tress.

Milton, Il Pens.
The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain.

Milton, P. I.
Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres. This and the next sense are adopted from the eighth.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do than with what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him counsel.
Shakespeare.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dimin their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in con-cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grace. Hooker.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grinding and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by giving its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton, Opticks.

15. A time; a spike.

A grain-staff is a quarter staff with a pair of short tines at the end, which they call graines.

Roy, E. and South Country Words.
The bastowain struck with a pair of grain-staff of the cabin window a most beautiful fish, about

TO GRAIN.† v. n. [from the noun. Fr.
grainier.] To yield fruit.

The lende began to cregne,
Which whilom had ben bayereye.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

TO GRAIN, or GRANE.† v. n. [Sax. grynnann.] To groan. Yorkshire dialect, and more conformable to the original word than groan.

GRAIN'D.† adj. [from grain.]

Swift.

To GRANE. * To groan. See To GRAIN.

GRANGE. † n. s. [grange, French; low Lat. grangia; probably from grana gerendo, the grange being in former times the place where the rents of monasteries were paid in grain, which was there stored up; the custody of which was assigned to one of the monks, who was called grangarius; and hence grange means simply a granary also, though Dr. Johnson takes no notice of the distinction.

The grange, in Lincolnshire, and other northern counties, signifies any lone house; and, in some places, bears with it the name of the village or town to which it is near.]

1. A farm; generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtue of it: nothing ever thrived on it, said he; — the trees were all blasted, the wine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose.

Johnson, Discovers.

It is only the poor grange.

The patrimony which my father left me, I would be tenant to.

Burton, and Fl. The Prophetess.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might choose, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must maintain a curate; and of this sort were their grange and parishes.

2. A grannery. [Fr. grange, a barn. Cottgrave.]

Methodist it was the sound
Of riot and ill-manag'd merriment,
Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe,
Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hind;
When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,
In wanton dance they praise the leucous Pan.

Milton, Comus.

GRANITE. n. s. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of most elegant polish. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opiques, porphyry, and the granite.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Adanson on Italy.

GRANITIC. adj. [from granite.] Consisting of granite.

Viewed at a distance, this enormous mass of stone has the appearance of a human figure; and its gigantic form has given rise to a variety of fables. On approaching it, we find that it consists of several ledges of granite, piled one upon another in the rudest manner. We, however, were hewn down to this granitic goal, we shall meet deities at every step.

Pochelet, Hist. of Devonsh. vol. I. P. I.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain. Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of man discerns not without instruction. Brewer.

Parrot efforts a soft delectant nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRANISAM. n. s. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in ludicrous or low language. Granny is still the northern word.

Her mother goodwife Polish has confest'd it
To granams. Keep, the nurse, how they did change
The children in their cradles.

H. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Ghosts never walk till after midnight, if I may believe my granam.

Bacon, and Fl. Loe's Progress.

I stripped again, as to what find all said me, as to satisfy my granam's farther curiosity.

Tatler, No. 15.

Oh my kind granam told me, Tim, take warning.

Gay.

GRANNY. See GRANNAM.

To GRANT. v. a. [from grantir, Fr. Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minshew thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor. Dr. Johnson.

— It is directly from the old French verb, granter, or grauunter, to promise, to satisfy. V. Roquefort, Gloss. in V. GRANAETER. Probably from the Latin gratum, what is agreeable. Our word at first, like the French, was grauunt, and so continued to be late in the seventeenth century.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church.

GRAPELESS. adj. [grape and less.] Wanting the strength and flavour of the grape. The entertainment consisted of cold fish, lean chickens, rusty hams, raw venison, and grapeless wines.

Jewins.

GRAPESTONE. n. s. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,

A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill.

Prior.

GRAPEPHICAL. adj. [γρᾱφω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In this so graphically a description of the Son of God, clothed in all the pomp and majesty of his Father, the attitude is most observable: "His right foot was on the sea, and his left on the earth."

Warburton, Sermon.

GRAPEFULLY. adv. [from graphically.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

After it, succeeded their third dance; than which a more numerous composition could not be seen; graphically disposed into letters, and honouring the name of the most sweet and ingenious prince, Charles duke of York.

B. Jonson, Masque at Court.

Very rhetorical delineations follow their miseries by this invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, graphically as in a map described.

Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. p. 419.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castelle.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GRAPEWICK. adj.

1. Graphical.

He can

Find all our atoms from a point t' a span;

Our closest creeks and corners; and can trace

Each line, as it were graphically, in the face.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Relating to engraving.

Availing himself of his poetical talent, and his facility in the grapewick art.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. ii. 157.

GRAPHOMETR. n. s. [Gr. graphometres, from the Gr. γράφω, to write, and μέτρον, a measure.] A surveying instrument.

As for the bearings and distances, they are very different from those I have given, which answered in every part, almost as exactly as if I had surveyed a field with a graphometer.

Drammond, Trac. (1749), p. 241.

GRAPEWICK. n. s. [grapple and grappin, Fr. the grapple of a ship. Cotgrave.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

With grisly sound one goeth the grute gunne —
In goth the grappinot so ful of crokes.

Chaucer, Leg. of Chetivatre.

To GRA'PPLE. v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappelen, German. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the M. Goth. gripan, to seize, to lay hold of any thing; Su. Goth. gripan; Sax. gripan.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

Your grace and I

Must grapple upon even terms no more.

Deum. and Fil. Miti's Tragedy.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close.

Milton on Education.

Living virtue, all achievements past,

Meets ours, still to grapple with at last.

Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings?

South.

Anteus here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statues seem to live.

Adrian.

2. To contend in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each

feet.

Two grappling Ætæas on the ocean meet,

And English fires with Belgian flames contend.

Dryden.

To GRA'PPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

That business

Grapples you to the heart and love of us.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

For bipinnages, vessels for the transporting of horses, we are indicted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Anacharis.

Haydon.

GRA'PPLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestler's hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus, strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in the air, expir'd & fell.

Or did his genius

Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them: on the Incubator get clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

1. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embarr'd.

Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT. n. s. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace. Not in use.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overbore, and down him stay'd
With their rule hands and grisly grapplement.

Spenser, F. Q.

GRA'PPY. adj. [Fr. grappuy.]

1. Full of clusters of grapes. Cotgrave.

The grape clusters spread
On his fair brows, and dangle on his head.

Adrian, Ovid.

2. Made of the grape.

And on the marble altar's polished frame
Pours forth the grape's stream.

Gay, Ovid.

GRA'SHOPPER. n. s. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners' legs,
The cover of the wheels of grashoppers.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries.

Bacon.

While cicada is rendered a grashopper, we commonly think that which is so called among us to be the true cicada; whereas as we have elsewhere declared, there is a great mistake; for we have not the cicada in England, and indeed no proper word for that animal, which the French name cigale: That which we commonly call a grashopper, and the French sauterelle, being one kind of locust, so rendered in the plague of Egypt, and in old Saxon named græthop.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 109.

Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows
crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chincies all around;
The grashopper avoids th' tainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there.

Adrian.

The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them.

Adrian, Spect.

GRA'SIER. n. s. One who feeds cattle.

See GRAZIER.

He was by turns a fiddler and a farmer, a grasier and a poet, with equal success.

Warren, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 390.

TO GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.

O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind.

Sidney.

Grasp ten thousand thunders, which be sent
Before him, such as in their souls indur'd Plagues.

Milton, P. L.

Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, bold.

Desham.

Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand.

Dryden, Ind. Emperor.

2. To seize; to catch at.

This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before.

Clarendon.

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time?

Young.

To GRASP. v. n.

1. To catch; to endeavor to seize; to try at.

So audacious and exultant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift.

2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.

See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugs'd for life.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

3. To gripe; to grenchon.

Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps will he can hold no more.

Dryden.

GRASP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp,
To kill the ravisher. Dryden, Don Sebastian.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in his grasp formerly.
Addison on Italy.

2. Possession; hold.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich ease to boot. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

5. Power of seizing.

Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton, Comus.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon.

GRASPERS.† n. s. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at. Sherwood.

GRASS.† n. s. [Græc. Sax. grass, Goth.
gras, feel, from gro, to germinate, to sprout.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.

Ye are grown fast as the beifer at grass, and bell
as bulls. Jer. l. 11.

The best being young, and only grass feed, was thin, light, and moist, and of a substance to endure the salt. Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.

GRASS OF PARNASSUS. n. s. [parnassia, Latin.] A plant.

This plant is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. Miller.

TO GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.

Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it, the sooner for grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tusser.

GRASS-GREEN.* adj. [grass and green.]
Green with grass.

He is dead and gone, lady,
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf,
At his heels a stone. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He lay him to the fatal place,
Where Margaret's body lay;
And stretch'd him on the grass-green turf,
That wrapt her breathless clay. Mallet, William and Margaret.

GRASS-GROWN.* adj. [grass and grown.]
Grown over with grass.

Desolating famine, who delights
In grass-grown cities, and in desert fields.
Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

Desolation o'er the grass-green street
Expands her raven wings.

If a friend my grass-green threshold find,
O, how my lonely cot renews with glees!
Shakespeare, Eliza, 7.

GRASS-LOT. n. s. [grass and plot.] A small level covered with short grass.

Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The part of your garden next your house should be a parterre for flowers, or grass-plots bordered with flowers. Temple.

They are much valued by our modern planters,
to adorn their walks and grass-plots. Mentmore.

GRASS-POLY. n. s. A species of WILLOW-WORT.

GRASSY-TION.* n. s. [Lat. grassatio.] A ranging about to do wrong.

If in vice there be a perpetual grassation, there must be virtue a perpetual vigilance.
Fletcher, Reg. i. 8.

GRASSLESS.* adj. [grass and less.] Wanting grass.

The wint'ry snow had covered all their greens,
Nought else upon the grassless ground but winter's waste was scene. Mir. for Mag. p. 356.

GRASSINESS. n. s. [from grassy.] The state of abounding in grass.

GRASSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.

Ne did he leave the mountains bare unseen,
Nor the rank grassy fens delights untidy'd. Spenser.

Their table was, and mossy seats had round.
Milton, P. l.

To dew obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryden.

GRATE. n. s. [crates, Latin.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other;
such as are in cloysters or prisons.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. Shakespeare.

Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those lordling bills, and open plain. Daniel.

A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vestals, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.

2. The range of bars within which fires are made.

My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator.

TO GRATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up with bars. Sherwood.

TO GRATE. v. a. [grater, Fr.]

1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.

Therest the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate.
Spenser.

Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

At the parties of the party were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object material, and fill it full of little holes. Newcomen, Opticks.

2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexa-tious.

Therest enraged, soon he ran upstairs,
Grinding his teeth, and grating his great heart.
Spenser.

They have been partial in the gospel, called and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them.
Decay of Piety.

Just resentment and hard usage can't Take it; unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

This habit of writing and discouraging, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and an apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.

3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.

The grating shock of wrathful iron arms.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

On a sudden open jar,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Hard thunder, that the lowest bottom shook

TO GRATE. v. n.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or im-portunity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
Wist perhappeth been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should end this lawless bloody bout
Of fang'd rebellion with a seal divine?
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grate. Shakespeare.

Fardulizing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange.

This grated harder upon the hearts of men.
South.

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent.
Locks.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate.
Hobbes.

GRATE.* adj. [Fr. grate, "grateful,"
Cotgrave; Lat. gratus.] Agreeable.

Not now in use; but if ingrate, as Dr.
Johnson asserts, be proper for what is unpleasant to the sense, grate for what is the contrary seems also to be proper.

It becomes grate and delicious enough by custom. St. Herbert, Truce, p. 311.

GRATEFUL. adj. [gratus, Lat.]

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton, P. l.

When some degree of wealth was given, he exerted all his strength in a return of grateful recognition to the author of it.

Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden, Feb.

2. Pleasing; acceptable; delightful; delicious.

Whatever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom; but whatever is too pleasing at first, grows quickly to satiety. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A man will endure the pain of hunger and thirst, and refuse such means and drinks as are most grateful to his appetite, if he be persuaded that they will endanger his health. Widius.

This place is the more grateful to strangers in respect that it being a frontier town, and bordering upon divers nations, many languages are understood here. Brown, Travels.

Now golden floors on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine.
Pope.

GRATEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]

1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.

He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully replied.
Milton, P. l.

Enough remains for household charge beside,
His wife and tender children to sustain,
And gratefully to feed his dumb deserving train.
Dryden, Virg.

In Cyprus ruled by men and gods obey'd,
The lover's toll the gratefully repaid. Granville.

2. In a pleasing manner.

Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination. Watts.

GRATEFULNESS.† n. s. [from grateful.]

1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete. Dr. Johnson says, citing Sidney and Herbert. The authority of others, especially of Pope, might have been added to defend the usage of the word. Nor is it yet, perhaps, disused.

A Laccian knight having sometimes served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him.

Sidney.
Blessings beforehand, lies of gratefulness.
The sound of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.

I am pich'd so high.
To such a growth of full prosperities,
That, to conceal my fortunes, were an injury
To gratefulness, and those more liberal favours
By whom all glories prosper.

Broom. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.
He [Fenton] died poor, but content; leaving no debts, or legacies, except of a few pounds to Mr. Trumbull and my lady, in token of respect, gratefulness, and mutual esteem.

Pope, Lett. to Broom.

2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.

GRAT'ER. n. s. [gratoir, Fr. from grate.]
A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.

Tender hands touch a nettle,
And it stings you for your pain;
Grasp it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains.
So it is with common natures,
Treat them gently, they rebel;
But be rough as rusted spears,
And the rugged edge will.

A. Hill.

GRATIFICATION. n. s. [gratification, Fr. gratification, Latin.]

1. The act of pleasing.
They are incapable of any design above the present gratification of their palates.

South.

2. Pleasure; delight.
How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long used to place his happiness!

Rogers.

3. Reward; recompence. A low word.
Calling drunkenness, good fellowship; pride, cunningness; rage, valour; bribery, gratification.

Dr. Marten, Discharge, &c. (1655), p. 233.

GRATIFY. v. a. [from gratify.] One who gratifies, or delights.

Bacchus, Ceres, and other eminent persons amongst the heathens, who were great gratifiers of the natural life of man.

Mare, Myst. of God, p. 169.

To GRATIFY. v. a. [gratifier, old Fr.; gratificator, Latin.]

1. To indulge; to please by compliance.
You steer between the country and the court,
Nor gratify what'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require.

Dryden.

2. To delight; to please; to humour; to soothe.
But pride stood ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe?

Dryden, Fals.

The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride.

Prior.

A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with saucers rather than food.

Tatler.

At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast.

Pope.

A thousand little imperfections are very repaying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding.

Addison.

3. To requite with a recompence; as,
I'll gratify you for this trouble.

GRAT'ING. n. s. [from grate.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other; as, the iron gratings of a prison.

2. In a ship, gratings are small ledges of sawed plank on the upper deck.

GRAT'INGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly, offensively.

GRAT'IS. adv. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.

The people cry you mock'd them; and of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd?

They sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee.

The taking of use, though be judged lawful, yet never approved by practice, but lost still gratis both to friends and strangers.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis.

I scorned to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offered it gratis by those universities.

Arbutnot, J. Bull.

GRATITUDE. n. s. [gratitudo, low Latin.]

1. Duty to benefactors.

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'rd's her deserving children is enroll'd,
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare, Coriol.

Suspicious thoughts his penative mind employ.
A silent gratitude, and clouded joy.

Harte.

2. Desire to return benefits.
The debt immense of endless gratitude.

Milton, P. L.

Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like.

South, Sermon.

GRATUITOUS. adj. [gratuitus, Latin; gratuit, Fr.]

1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.

We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry.

L'Estrange.

2. Asserted without proof.
The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous declination of soma, the same poet given us.

Rey.

GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]

1. Without claim or merit.

2. Without proof.
I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter; this is to sacrifice will and choice to these particles.

Chapman, Phil. Prin.

GRATUITY. n. s. [gratuité, Fr. from gratuit.]

1. A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.

They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity.

Broom on the Odyssey.

He used every way to prevent us with his alms, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him.

Swift.

To GRATULATE. v. a. [gratulator, Latin.]

1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.

To gratify the good Andronicus, And gratulate his safe return to Rome.

The people will accept whom he administers.

Titus Andronicus.

Whither away so fast?
—No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle prisoner there.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Every itself cannot but grateulate the church of England that is so furnished with learned bishops.

Sir J. Harrington, Dr. View of the Church, p. 10.

Since nature could behold no dire a crime,
I grateulate at least any native crime.

That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore.

Dryden, Fals.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy escape from rumour grateulate.

No less than if from prison, and descent,
Do beg thy care unto thy sister state. J. Brown.

3. To reward. Not now in use.
A thanks to every one; and to grateulate
So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods higher and higher
Than you have need for.

Broom, and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

I could not chuse but grateulate your honest endeavours with this remembrance.

Heywood, Apol. for Actors.

GRATULATION. n. s. [from gratulation, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him.

Hooker.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill.

Milton, P. L.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance.

South, Sermon.

GRATULATORY. adj. [from gratulation.]

1. Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

After a short preamble gratulatory, and signifying his majesty's summons.

Conference at Hampton Court, (1605), p. 23.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 24.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave.

Gibson's Camden.

GRAVE. n. s.

1. The place in the ground in which the dead are repositied. [græf, græf, Sax. from græpan, to dig; græfa, Icel. græban, Goth. and thus the Germ. grab, a grave; and perhaps all may be referred to the Heb. kaber, a grave. Graves were formerly called by the English pætz.]

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spirit,
In the church-way paths to glide.

Shakespeare.

Thou wilt not leave us in the loneliness here.

Milton, P. L.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters, is our own security.

Danvers, Sepulch.

A flood of waters would overwhelm all things.

fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth.

Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; these solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths.

Nelson.

But must be wisely loud, and gravelly proud!

Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRAVITY, n. s. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes

The light and careless livid that it wears,

Than settled age his sables, and his weeds

Importing health and gravity. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But yet we were of counsel when too too much

Number makes long disputes and gravelly dull.

Denham.

GRAVEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Lat.]
Strong scented. Dict.
GRAVEUR. n. s. [graveur, French: from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the graver dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Gravins, Dufren.

2. The stile or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Beylc.

The tollsome hours in diff'rent labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide. Guy, Fren.

GRAVID. adj. [lat. gravidus.] Pregnant. The word is old in our language.

A careful husband over his gravid associate.

Sir T. Herbert, Tran. p. 35.

GRAVIDITY. n. s. [gravidus, Lat.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

Women obstructed, have not always the fore-mentioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRAVING. n. s. [from grave.]

1. Carved work.

Skillful to work in gold: — also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

2. Impression.

Later vices, oaths, or leaguers can never blot out those former gravings, or characters, which by just and lawful means were made upon their souls. King Charles.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,
That matter is with active force endued;
That all in parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, must. Blackmore.

That subtle matter is of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bowley.

GRAVITATION. n. s. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRAVITY. n. s. [gravitas, Latin; graviti, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unobtainable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative; absolute gravity, is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown, Fals. Err.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tony of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the deeper parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton, Opticks.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of bearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

Epigrams, Æn.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Law.

GRAY. n. s. [græu, Cambro-Brit. græu, Germ. crur, blood, Serenius.] The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Most we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gray, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumption.

There may be a stronger broath made of vegetables than of any gray soup. Arbutnot on Alimentis.

GRAY. adj. [græu, Saxon; græu, Danish; græu, Germ. and Dutch. Mr. H. Tooke thinks that it is from the Sax. gegræpan, to dye, to colour.]

They left me then, when the gray hooded even,
Like a sad coxswain in palmer's weed, Milton, Comus.

Those gray and dan colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect white, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton, Opticks.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grisley, and many others. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd. Milton, P. L.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glennid, Requir.

Gray headed infant! said in vain grown old! Lie charms restless? Dryden, Juv.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison, Spect.

Her gray hairs beyond dyings damning looks unrudd, And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark, like the opening or close of day; of the colour of asher.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Camilla, that is, gray eyed. Comden, Rem.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night, Chequ'd with the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shakspeare.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning straks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay, Trivia.

GRAY. n. s. A gray colour. The gray of the morning is common in many places for the break of day.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflect of Cynthia's brow. Shakspeare, Rom. Jul.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray. Parnell.

GRAY. n. s. [from its colour.] A badger. Ainsworth.

GRAYBEARD. n. s. [gray and beard.] An old man; in contempt.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
— Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspeare.

Have I in conquest strait mine ear so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

A dull relation of the acts of gray graybeards to a young price might grow tedious.

Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 35.

GRAYFLY. n. s. [gray and fly.] The trumpet-fly.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn. Milton, Lycidas.

GRAYISH. adj. [from gray.] Approaching to a gray colour. Sherwood.

On either side did shine a grayish eye.
Warner, Albion's England.

GRAYLE. See GRAIL.

GRAYLING. n. s. [thymallus.] The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton, Angler.

GRAYNESS.† n. s. [from gray.] The quality of being gray. Sherwood.

TO GRAZE.† v. n. (Sax. grarian.)

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.
The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck.

Shakespeare, As you like it.
(Once where you will, you shall not house with me.)
Shakespeare.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house.

Dryden, Fob.
The more ignoble throng
Attend their stately steps, and slowly graze along.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain campaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath.

The sewers must be kept so as the winter may not stay too long in the spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never grow to purpose that year.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was expressed, so the first perpetually grazed.

Bacon on the War with Spain.

4. [From raser, French.] To touch lightly.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets going;
Breaks out into a second course of mischief;
Killing in relays of mortality. Shakspeare, Hen. F.

A bullet grazes on any place, when it gently turns up the surface of what it strikes upon.

Cowd, in F. Grass-Heath.

The shot—
Here'd Talgal's gaberline, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass habergeon;
Who straight a surgeon cried, a surgeon!

TO GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grass.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakspeare.

Suyf.

4. To strike lightly. [Fr. raser.]

Whom solid virtue
The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze, nor pierce. Shakspeare, Othello.

We still say, the skin is grazed, or slightly hurt.

Cowd, in F. Grass-Heath.

GRAYZER. n. s. [from graze.] One that grazes or feeds on grass.

His flock daily crops
Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf
Sufficient: after them the cackling goose,
Close grazer, finds wherewith to cuss her want.

Philips.

GRAYZER. n. s. [from graze.] One who feeds cattle.

All graziers prefer their cattle from meager pastures to better.

Bacon.
Gentle peace, which fillst the husbandman's barns, the grazer's folds, and the tradesman's shop.

Hovell.
His confusion increased when he found the alderman's father to be a grazer.

Spectator.
Of agriculture, the desolation made in the country by engrossing graziers, and the great yearly importation of corn from England, are lamentable instances under what discouragement it lies.

GREASE. n. s. [graisse, French.]

1. The soft part of the fat; the oily or unctuous part of animals.

Grease, that's sweaten
From the mouth-river's glibbet, throw
Into the flame.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To take out a spot of grease they use a coal upon brown paper.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thus hopit, with sacrifice of ocean slain,
To compass wealth, and bribe the god of gain.

To give those flocks and herds, with large increase;
Fool! to expect them from a bullock's grease;

Are just to heaven, and to their promise true!

Pope, Ode on St. John's Day.

Misfortune made the throne her seat,
And some could be unhappy but the great. Rome.

Despise the force of state,
The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

The marble tomb, that rise on high,
Whose dead in vaulted arches lie!

These, all the poor remains of state,
Adorn the rich, or praise the great. Farwell.

10. General; extensive in consequence or influence.

Prolifick humour, softening all her globe,
Fermented the great mother to conceive.

Milton, P. L.

11. Illustrious; eminent; noble; excellent.

O Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in sight.

Jer. i. 6.

The great Creator thus replied. Milton, P. L.

The great Son returns'd

Victorious with his saints. Milton, P. L.

Fair angel, thy desire which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify

The great Work-master, leads to no excess
That reaches blame. Milton, P. L.

Great are thy works, Jehovah, infinite
Thy power! what thought can measure thee, or tongue

Relate thee! greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant angels: Thee that day
Thy thunders magnified, but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milton, P. L.

The great luminary

Alone the vulgar convulsions thick,
That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L.

Here Caesar grac'd with both Minerva's arms,
Caesar, the world's great master, and his own.

Pope.

Scipio,

Great in his triumphs, in retirement great. Pope.

12. Grand of aspect; of elevated mien.

Such Dido was; with such becoming state,
Amidst the crowd, she walks serenely great.

Dryden, Virg.

13. Magnanimous; generous; high minded.

In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient-bearer to the humbleness. Sidney.

14. Opulent; sumptuous; magnificent.

Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcino, such magnificence
Equal'd in all his glories. Milton, P. L.

He disdain'd not to appear at great tables and festive entertainments. Atterbury.

15. Intellectually great; sublime.

This new created world, how good, how fair,
Answering his great idea. Milton, P. L.

16. Swelling; proud.

Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discourag'd with great looks; wherefore he began to batter the walls. Knollys.

17. Familiar; much acquainted. A low word, Dr. Johnson says. It is used in this sense in Scotland, and Dr. Jamieson thinks it not the adjective great improperly used, but as immediately formed from the Saxon grēd, peace, grēdian, to agree, to be in a state of agreement.

Those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are great with them, and thereby wound their honour. Bacon.

18. Pregnant; teeming.

His eyes sometimes even great with tears.

Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb always great with me. Jerem. ix. 17.

Their bellies great

With swelling vanity, bring forth deceit. Sidney.

This fly, for most he stings in heat of day,
From cattle great with young keep thou away.

Mays, Virgil.

19. It is added in every step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as, great grandson is the son of my grandson.

I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-grandchildren tongue came out of Persia. Comden, Rom.

What we call great-great-grandfather they called forthafader. Comden, Rom.

Your great uncle, Edward the black prince of Wales. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

He has crack'd the league
Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Their holiday-clothes go from father to son, and are seldom worn out till the second or third generation; so that 'tis common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather. Addison.

20. Hard; difficult; grievous. A proverbial expression.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons. Bp. Taylor, Devotions.

GREAT. n. s. [from the adjective.] The whole; the gross; the whole in a lump.

To let out thy harvest by great or by day,
Let this by experience lead thee the way:

By great will deceive thee with ling'ring at night,
By day with dispatch. Tupper, Husbandry.

It were behoveful, for the strength of the navy, that no ships should be builded by the great; for by daily experience they are found to be weak and imperfect. Raleigh, Essay.

He did at length so many slain forget,
And lost the tale, and took them by the great. Dryden.

Carpenters build a house by the great, and are agreed for the sum of money. Maron, Mech. Err.

I set aside one day in a week for lovers, and interpret by the great for any gentleman who is turned of sixty. Addison.

GREATBELLED. adj. [great and belly.] Pregnant; teeming.

Greatbelled women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press. Shakespeare.

A greatbelled woman, walking through the city
In the daytime, had her child struck out of her womb, and carried half a furlong from her. Williams, Math. Magic.

TO GREATEN.† v. a. [from great.] To aggrandize; to enlarge; to magnify. A word little used, Dr. Johnson says; yet it is found in the writings of some of our best authors.

After they sought to greaten themselves in Italy little, using strangers for the commanders of their armies, the Turks by degrees beat them out of all their giddy countries. Raleigh.

Whether doth he bend all his powers but to attain his own ends, to cross another's, to greaten himself, to supplant a rival? Bp. Hall, Sermon on Mon.

The popes are accustomed to do the like, in consideration of their nephews whom they would greaten. Dryden, Dyn. of the Duchess of York.

A favourite's business is to please his king, a minister's to please and exalt him. Bp. Ascham.

TO GREATEN.* v. n. To increase; to become large.

Being committed against an infinite majesty, it [is] greaten, and rises to the height of an infinite demerit. South, Serm. x. 356.

GREATHARTED. adj. [great and heart.] High spirited; unaffected.

The earl, as greatharted as he, declared that he neither cared for his friendship, nor feared his hatred. Chaucer.

GREATLY. adv. [from great.]

1. In a great degree.
Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply. Milton, P. L.

2. Nobly; illustriously.
Yet London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst caprice. Dryden, Ann. Mar.

3. Magnanimously; generously; bravely.
Where are these bold intrepid sons of war,
That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,
And to their general send a brave defiance? Addison, Cato.

GREATNESS. n. s. [Sax. grootnes.] n.

1. Largeness of quantity or number.
By greatness I do not only mean the bulk of any single object, but the largeness of a whole view, considered as one entire piece. Addison, Spect. No. 412.

2. Comparative quantity.
We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commensurate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of those sort of quantities. Locke.

All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pains equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself, because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is. Locke.

3. High degree of any quality.
Zeal, in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward, and the certainty. Rogers.

4. High place; dignity; power; influence; empire.
The most servile flattery is lodged most easily in the greatest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to greatness, and then have they the wit to discern the right degrees of duty. Sidney.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness. Shakespeare.

So many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

I beg your greatness not to give the law
In other realms; but beaten, to withdraw. Dryden, Bu.

Approaching greatness met him with her charms
Of pow'r and future state;
He shook her from his arms. Dryden.

Themistocles raised the Athenians to their greatness at sea, which he thought to be the true and constant interest of that commonwealth. Suiff.

5. Swelling pride; affected state.
My lord would have you know that it is not of pride or greatness that he cometh not aboard your ships. Bacon.

6. Merit; magnanimity; nobleness of mind.
Greatness of mind and nobleness their seat
Build in her loveliest. Milton, P. L.

7. Grandeur; state; magnificence.
Greatness with Timon dwells in such a draught,
As brings all Braggadocio before your thought. Pope.

GREAVE.† n. s.

1. A grove. [Sax. græf.] This is a very ancient form of our word grove.]

Phœbus — with his streamer drieth in the groves
The silver droppings, hanging on the leaves. Chaucer, Ru. Tote.

She fled into that covert grease.

Spenser, F. v. li. vi. 45.

Some hid among the leaves,

Some in the taller trees, some in the lower greases.

Dryden, Polyd. S. 13.

Yet when there haps a honey-fall,

We'll lick the sirup leaves,

And tell the bees that there is gall

To that upon the greases.

Dryden.

2. A groove. [Icel. groof, from graf, to dig.]

Either fast closed in some hollow grease,

Or buried in the ground from jealousy.

Spenser, F. v. iii. i. 42.

GREAVE, n. s. [from grece, French.]

Armour for the legs; a sort of boots.

It wants the singular number.

He had greaves of brass upon his legs.

1 Sam. xvii. 6.

A shield make for him, and a helm, fair greaves,

And curesh such

Chapman, Iliad.

GRECIAN, n. s. [Latin, Græcus, from Græcia.]

1. A native or inhabitant of Greece.

The children also of Judah, and the children of Jerusalem, have ye sold unto the Greecians.

Jer. iii. 6.

For every false drop in her bewdy veins

A Greecian's life hath sunk.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

2. A Jew who understood or spoke Greek.

There arose a murmuring of the Greecians against the Hebrews.

GRECIAN, adj. Relating to country of Greece.

The royal towers

Of great Seleucia, built by Greecian kings,

Milton, P. L.

Look upon Greece under its free states, and you would think its inhabitants lived in different climates, and under different heavens from those at present; so different are the geniuses which are formed under Turkish slavery and Greecian liberty.

Addison, Spect. No. 287.

GRECIAN FIRE, [Fr. feu Grægois.] Wild-fire; fire which will burn within water.

TO GRECIANIZE, v. n. [from Greecian; Fr. grecianizer.] To play the Greecian; to speak Greek; to use phrases borrowed from the Greek.

Cotgrave, in V. Grecizer.

TO GRECISE, v. a. [Fr. grecizer.] To translate into Greek.

The name — is grecized, with many other German words.

GRECIUM, n. s. [græcismus, Latin.] An edition of the Greek language.

This word was in use early in the seventeenth century. It is in the enlarged edition of Bullock's Expositor, 1635.

Milton has infused a great many latinisms, as well as greecisms, and sometimes barbarisms, into his poem.

Addison, Spect.

That the present Latin Dictys had a Greek original, now lost, appears from the numerous greecisms with which it abounds.

Literal renderings of barbarisms and greecisms should be given in the margin.

Apoc. xiv. 13. Rev. on the Tr. of the Bible, p. 378.

GRE'DALIN, n. See GRIDELIN.

GREED, n. s.

1. Good will; favour; good graces. [gré, French; probably from the Lat. gratia, or gratus. Ital. "Prendi in grado"; and so our old phrase, "to take in gree," i. e. in good part, favourably; frequent in Spenser.]

And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service need,
Which she accepts with thanks and goodly gree.

Spenser, F. v.

2. Rank; degree. [Lat. gradus.]

He is a shepherd great in gree.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

3. A step. [Lat. gradus; Fr. grez. Dr. Johnson gives greer, which he says is also written grece or grice, and is corrupted from degrees; and he defines it "a flight of steps." But the word, thus varied, seems to be nothing more than the plural of gree, a step; whence, in the north of England, grees are stairs, steps. Greer has been also used in the singular number, and greecies in the plural. See GREER.]

And when he sufficed, Paul stood in the grez, [on the stairs, present translation.]

Wicliffe, Acts, xxi. 40.

By many a gree ymade of martyrly grez.

Lydgate, cited by Warton, H. E. p. ii. 89.

TO GREED, v. n. [old Fr. greer.] To agree. It is common in our old poetry, but in modern editions is printed with an elision greed, as if it were merely an abbreviation of agree.

Loquage — for free-men debates, free
From hurt, all with their crevices they greed.

Mr. for Mag. p. 116.

We have greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding day.

Shakespeare, Tim. of the Shrew.

The meane that grees with country matters and power.

Greene, Farewell to Folly, (1617.)

GREED, n. s. [a corruption of greed. See GREED.] A flight of steps.

After the procession, the king himself remaining seated in the choir, the lord archbishop, upon the greed of the choir, made a long oration.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

GREED, n. s. [Sax. gærbiz; Goth. greddon, to hunger; Icel. graed, voracity; probably from the Gr. γράειν, to devour.] Greediness. I find it used by Scottish writers; and Chaucer once mentions a "rich grede," meaning a greedy person, Rom. R. 6002.

Whose avarice and greed of gear is such, that they care not whom with they joine.

Greene, Aust. of Humours, (Edinb. 1605.)

His insatiable greed of money and power.

Brace, Trac. iv. iii.

GREEDILY, adv. [Sax. gærblice.]

1. Eagerly; ravenously; voraciously; with keen appetite or desire.

He coveteth greedily all the day long.

Prov. xxi. 26.

Greedy she ingord'd without restraint.

Milton, P. L.

He swallows it as greedy

As parched earth drinks rain, Danah.

Ev'n deadly plants, and herbs of poisonous juice,
Will hunger seek; and to prolong our breath,
We greedily devour our certain death. Dryden.

2. With vehemence; with desire.

In the primitive church was the gospel greedily received of the universal world.

Bible, Yet a Course, &c. (1543) fol. 90. b.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward.

St. Jude, ver. 11.

GREEDINESS, n. s. [Sax. gærbiznes.] Ravenousness; voracity; hunger; eagerness of appetite or desire.

Let not the greediness of the belly, nor lust of the flesh, take hold of me.

Eccles. xiii. 6.

Fox in stealth, wolf in greediness.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Thither with all greediness of affection are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

If thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee.

Shakespeare, Timon.

I with the same greediness drink, Danah.

As water when I thirst, to swallow Greed.

GREEDY, adj. [gærbiz, Sax. gæradig, Dan. greig, Dutch. See also GREED.]

1. Ravenous; voracious; hungry.

Ass lion that is greedy of his prey.

Psalm xvii. 12.

Be not unsatiable in any dainty thing, nor too greedy upon meats.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elia's eaters, and bring him food. King Charles.

2. Eager; vehemently desirous. It is now commonly taken in an ill sense.

Greedy to know, as is the mind of man, Their cause of death, swift to the fire she ran.

Parfleur.

The ways of every one that is greedy of gain.

Prov.

Stern look'd the fiend, as prostrate of his will,
Not half greedy, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

While the reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands.

Dryden, Verg.

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune!

Law.

GREEDY-GUT, n. s. A glutton; a devourer; a belly-god. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word; and it is yet retained in low conversation.

GREEN, n. s. [Lat. Græcius.]

1. A native of Greece. [Sax. Lijeca; Fr. Grec.]

Titus, who was with me, being a Green.

Gol. ii. 5.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perple's the Grecks and Cytherea's son.

Milton, P. L.

He [Homer] makes his countrymen and favourites, the Grecks, move forward in a regular determined march, and in the depth of silence.

Addison, Spect. No. 13.

2. The Greek language.

Paul said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? who said, Canst thou speak Grecks?

Acts, xxi. 37.

Milton, Sonnet.

3. A term applied to a merry person, [supposed to be from the Lat. greecor, to play the Greek, to use their exercises; or, as some take it, to drink and revel as they used to do. Sherwood makes the phrase, "a merry greck," which he renders into the French gale-bon-trappe; and Cotgrave renders that by "a merrie grig." However, see CRICK and GRIG.]

She's a merry greck indeed.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

GREEN, adj. Belonging to Greece; relating to that country.

In the Greek tongue he hath his name Apollon.

I shall publish, very speedily, the translation of a little Greek manuscript. Addition, Spect. No. 257.

GRE'EKISH.* adj. [Sax. lispicize.] Peculiar to Greece; pertaining to Greece.

He forthwith brought his own nation to the Greekish fashion. 2 Macc. iv. 10.
I'll beat his blood with Greekish wine to-night. Shakespeare, Tr. and Creat.

They allege their numbers, and the promise'd help of Anasarcus, a noble Greekish youth. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 1.

GRE'ELING.* n. s. [from Greek.] An inferior Greek writer. A contemptuous word.

Which of the Greeklings durst ever give precepts to Demosthenes? B. Jonson, Discourses.

GREEKRO'SE.* n. s. [lychnis.] The flower campion.

Thy beauty, Campion, very much may claim;
But of Greek-rose how didst thou gain thy name?
Tate, Tr. of Conely.

GREEN.† adj. [grun, German; groen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Our word is the Saxon adjective grene. Junius derives green from the verb grōpan, from derer, virere; Mr. H. Tooker represents it as the past participle of grēnian, virere.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of; there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale, and scarce a green.

There are writers of great distinction, who have made it an argument for Providence, that the whole earth is covered with green, rather than with any other colour, as being such a mixture of light and shade, that it comforts and strengthens the eye, instead of weakening or grieving it. For this reason several painters have a green cloth hanging near them, to ease the eye upon, after too great an application to their colouring. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Groves far ever green. Addition, Spect. No. 387.
2. Pale; sickly; from whence we call the maid's disease the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's χλωρίτις velas.

Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? Hath it slept since
And wakes it now to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
There's never any of these damnable boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green sickness. Shakespeare, Hen. 1st.
Till the green sickness and love's force betray'd
To death's remorseless arms the unhappy maid. Garrat.

3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed; from trees in spring.

If I have any who maid of green old age, I have Virgil's authority; Sed cruda de viriditate senectutis. Dryden.

4. New; fresh; as, a green wound.

The door is open, sir; there lies your way:
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakespeare.

Grifts are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out. Shakespeare, Hen. 1st.

In a vault,
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies fostering in his blood. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon, Essays.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party; but those are invidious topics, too green in our remembrance. Dryden.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker, Dedication.

Being an olive tree
Which late he fell'd; and being green, must be made lighter for his manage.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be attended, and therefore stone is more fragile than metal, and so dry wood is more fragile than green. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disband'd parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.
The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mertimer, Husb.
6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts, Logic.

7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My salad days,
When I was green in judgement, cold in blood! Shakespeare.

O charming youth, in the first opening page
So many green, in so green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters now. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If you would find green genes, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mertimer, Husb.

Stubble green at Michaelmas are seen
Upon the spit, next May produces green. King, Cookery.

GREEN.† n. s.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd. Shakespeare.

But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn;
And walks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.

Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in daylight; and if at the less you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively. Newton, Opticks.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue; if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green. Watts, Logic.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town. Shakespeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been,
Follow me as I sing. Milton, Arcades.

The young Emilia, fairer to be seen
Than the fair lily on the flow'ry green. Dryden, Fob.

3. Leaves; branches; wreaths; herbs; plants.

With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden, Virg.

The fragrant green I seek my brows to bind. Dryden.

The vineyard seems to have been a plantation distinct from the garden; as also the beds of greens mentioned afterwards at the extremity of the inclosure, in the nature and usual place of our kitchen garden. Addition, Gard. No. 175.

To GREEN.† v. a. [Sax. grēnian.] To make green. A low word.

Great spring before
Green'd all the year; and fruits and blossoms bluish'd

In social sweetness on the self-same bough. Thomson, Spring.

GREENHOUSE. n. s. [cytio genista, Latin.] A shrub. Miller.

GREENCLOTH. n. s. A board or court of justice held in the counting-house of the king's household, for the taking cognizance of all matters of government and justice within the king's court-royal; and for correcting all the servants that shall offend. Diet.

For the greencloth law, take it in the largest sense, I have no opinion of it. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

GRE'ENCOLOURED.* adj. [green and colour.] Pale; sickly.

At your foul name
Green-colour'd maid would have turn'd red with shame. Townesur, Revenger's Tragedy.

GRE'ENEYED. adj. [green and eye.] Having eyes coloured with green.

Dreadful thoughts, and red-hot greeneyed despair,
And shudd'ring fear, and greeneyed jealousy. Shakespeare.

GREENGAZE. n. s. A species of plum.

GREENHOUSE.* n. s. [green and grocer.] A retailer of greens, i. e. fruit and the productions of the kitchen garden. It is a word common in the metropolis, and perhaps in other large towns.

GRE'ENHOOD.* n. s. [green and hood.] A state of immaturity; childishness.

In her is beauty withouten pride,
Youthe, withouten greend or fall. Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

GRE'ENHORN.* n. s. [from green.] A raw youth, easily imposed upon, unacquainted with the world. A low expression.

GRE'ENHOUSE. n. s. [green and house.] A house in which tender plants are sheltered from the weather.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, which you may know by the freezing of a mistletoe cloth set in your greenghouse, kindly some charcoal.

Boyle, Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenghouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure. Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenghouse. Spect.

GRE'ENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greinish looks, all loose, untied,
As each had been a bride. Spranger.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow.

Newton, Optics.

GREENLY, adj. [from green.] Of a green colour.

And make the greenly ground a drinking cup
To sup the blood of murder'd bodies up.

Gascoigne, Jocasta, (1577.)

GREENLY, adv. [from green.]

Hammond, Works, iv. 471.

After break their fast
On greensward ground, a cool and grateful taste.

Dryden.

In shallow soils all is gravel within a few inches; and sometimes in low ground a thin greensward, and sloughy undergrowth; which last turns all into bog.

Swift.

GREENWEED, n. s. [green and weed.] Dyers' weed.

GREENWOOD, n. s. [green and wood.] A wood considered as it appears in the spring or summer. It is sometimes used as one word.

Among wild herbs under the greenwood shade.

Faifan.

It happen'd on a summer's holiday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon shunn'd the church. Dryden.

GREENS, n. s. [Fr. græc; Lat. gradus.] A stair. See GREER.

Sherwood.

Ascending from this picture by two or three greens or steps, until you come to the rails that compass in the high altar, you there behold that noble and most glorious inland floor.

Kerpe, Monument, Westm. (1683), p. 32.

TO GREET, v. a. [grator, Lat.; grætan, Saxon; grit, Su. Goth.; græt, Saxon, peace; "Gud groete ju," God bless you, Pomer. Germ. Serenius. So greet is explained in the margin of our present version of the Bible, "Ask him in my name of peace." 1 Sam. xxv. 5.]

1. To address at meeting.

Go to Nabal, and greet him in my name.

1 Sam. xiv. 5.

I think it meet, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would make strangers greet themselves.

Donne.

I would gladly go.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner

You greet with present grace, and great prediction;
To me you speak not. Shakspere, Macbeth.

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shaksp. Rich. II.

Left his ground nest, high tow'ring to descry
The moon's approach, and greet her with his song.

Milton, P. R.

Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton, Epit. M. W.
The sea's our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet.

Waller.

Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn:
None greets; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryd. Fsk.

4. To congratulate.

His lady, seeing all that channel from afar,
Approach in haste to greet his victorie.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. To pay compliments at a distance.

The king's a-bed,

And sent great largess to your officers;
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shaksp. Macb.

6. To meet, as those who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste

Is now urg'd on you.
—We will greet the time. Shaksp. K. Lear.

TO GREET, v. n. To meet and salute.

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakspere.
Such was that face on which I dwell'd with joy,
Ere Grece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more.

Pope, Ode on.

TO GREET, v. n. To weep; to lament.

See TO GREET.

GREETER, n. s. [from the verb.] He who greets.

Spenser, Shep. Col. April.

TO GRAITH, v. n. To prepare. See TO GRAITH.

GRE'MIAL, adj. [gremium, Latin.] Pertaining to the lap. Dict.

GRENA'DE, n. s. [Fr. from pomeum granatum, Lat.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusee fastened to the touch-hole; as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near.

Harris.

GRENA'DIER, n. s. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment;

such men being [formerly] employed to throw grenades.

Peace alays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of greenade. Gay, Pastors.

GRENAD. n. s. See GRENADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all such mellow grenades can suffice.

You may as well try to quench a flaming fire
Made with a shell of fair water as hope to succeed. Watts.

GREUT. n. s. A kind of fossilie body.

A sort of tin ore, with its greut; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of bayalls, and of a brown shining colour, immersed therein. Greus, Muscum.

GREW. The preterite of grow.

The pleasing task he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew.

GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray.] See GRAY.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I spent at mid of his grey beard. Shakespeare, L. Lear.

Our green youth copies what grey sinners act;
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.

GREYHOUND. n. s. [xuphunds, Saxon.

Serenius calls the animal xuphund, from xupan, to seek. Caius de Canibus describes the name from the Lat. gradus, implying a dog of the first order, or degree. Minsheu from Gracius, as if the word were Greek-hound; the Greeks being the first, he says, who used such dogs for hunting. Blount calls them gyre-hounds. Mr. Pegge follows Blount's opinion; and observes, that "gyre-hound, according to Phillips, is the largest sort of falcon, next in size to the eagle. So, I conceive, the greyhound was originally gyrehound, as being the largest, tallest, and swiftest species of hound. The letter r, being transposed into the place of the y, will produce gyre-hound." Anecd. of the Engl. Lang. 2d edit. p. 350.] A tall fleet dog that chases in sight.

First, may a trusty greyhound transform himself into a tiger? Sidney.

So on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A ha'n' need here from greedy greyhounds go.

Sidney.
Th' impatient greyhound, slept from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare.

Dryden.

GRICE. n. s.

1. A little pig. [Su. Goth. gryz, the same. Formerly it meant a young wild boar. Grise in the north of England is used for swine.]

2. A step or gress.

No, not a grise;
This a step to love. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
One showed how fruitfully that had watered his head, as he stood under the grices. J. Bonum, Marquis at Court.

TO GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Ital.] To cut; to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not now in use.

His potent spear he thrust with potent arm,
That through his thigh the mortal steel did gride. Spenser, F. Q.

So soon
The griding sword, with discontinuous wound,

GRIDELIN. n. s. [Fr. gris in lin, gray of flax, q. d. gray with a purple hue. Our word is also written greddine. It was probably a fashionable colour among the ladies.] Of a purplish colour.

The ladies dress'd in rich rymen were seen,
Of Florence satten, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy griddine. Dryden, Fob.

His love fades, like my greddine petticoat.

GRIDIRON. n. s. [grind, islandic, a grate, and iron.] Dr. Johnson. — Rather, perhaps, from the Su. Goth. grader, to bake; as Dr. Jamieson also observes. A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.

He had added two bars to the gridiron.

GRIEF. n. s. [from griev; griff, Welsh, probably from the English. Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the Fr. grief, which may be from the Lat. gravo, to weigh down. Grief had formerly, for the plural, grievs or grievs.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past. I will instruct my sorrows to be proud; For Grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. Swift.
The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief.

2. Grievance; harm. Not in use. Be cautious for redress of all these grievs, And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.
The king hath sent to know
The nature of your grievs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete. He being at that time griped, sore, and having grief in his lower bellie.

Treatise of Sundry Diseases, (1591.)
Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour has no skill in surgery then? No.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.
GRIEFVUL. adj. [grief and full.] Full of sorrow or grief. Obsolete.

The day renders my grievful plaint.

Suckville, Trag. of Coriolanus, (1601.)
Which when she sees with ghastly grievful eyes,
Her heart does quake. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 40.

GRIEFLESS. adj. [grief and less.] Sorrowless; without grief. Hulcot.

GRIEFSHOT. n. s. [Grief and shot.] Pierced with grief.

A discontented friend, griefshot
With his unkindness. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [from griev.] Lamentable.

There is a vice full grievable. Cowley, Conf. Am. B. 4.

GRIEVOUSLY. n. s. [grievance, old Fr.] 1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

Madam, I pity much your grievance. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [griever, Fr.; griever, Flemish; gravis, Lat.]

1. To afflict; to hurt. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.

Forty years long was I griev'd with this generation. Psal.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi. 6.

Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour Should be to close those breaches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful. When one man kills another, thinking that he killed a wild beast, if the same man remember afterwards that he hath done so, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Parkins.

3. To lament. The beholders believed his [lord Stafford's] words, and grieved his destiny. Bereby, Mem. p. 112.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief; perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold The end of all thy offspring end so sad.

Milton, P. L.
With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden, Fob.

GRIEVEN. n. s. [from griev.] The person or circumstance which causes grief.

A griever and quencher of the Spirit, a more perfect piece of atheism. Hammond, Works, i. 514.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from griev.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that had conclude it. Shakspeare, VIII.

GRIEVOUSLY. adj. [grievous, old Fr. gravis, Lat.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be borne. To the flesh, as the apostle himself gratefully, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die. Prov. x. 1.

2. Such as causes sorrow. To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Clarendon.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness. He durst not disprove, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to.

4. Atrocious; heavy. It was a grievous fault, And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Crying alas I call those, which are so heinous, and in their kind so grievous, that they hasten God's judgements, and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinners. Parkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick. Shakespeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. Painfully; with pain. K K 2

Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. With discontent; with ill will.
Gritus, perceiving how grievously the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt.

Knots.

3. Calamitously; miserably.

I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information, oftentimes grievously vexed.

Hobbes.

4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.

Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.

GRIFFYOUSNESS. † n. s. [from grifious.]

1. Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

Is. xli. 15.

That the grievousness of the penalty in many statutes be mitigated.

Bacon, Prop. on the Laws of England.

2. Atrociousness.

Deferring of time, or grifuousness of sinners, do not prejudice his grace.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 709.

GRIFFIN. † n. s. [It should rather be

GRIFFON. } written grifon, or grifphon;
Lat. grifphus and gryps; Gr. γρύψ; Icel. grifpan or grifpan; Goth. griep, from grifpan, to seize; and so, in our old language, this fabled animal is termed the gripe. See GRIPE.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among those winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient.

Penshon on Blazoning.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconessus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold.

Brown.

GRIFFONLIKE. \ adj.* [griffin and like.]

Resembling the rapacity of a griffin.

Citations and processes to be served by a corporeality of griffinlike promoters and apparitors.

Milnes, Of Reform. B. i.

GRIOT. n. s. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel. [Some derive this appellation from the Sax. cecca, the bank of a river, because these animals are fond of harbouring under it. But, from the contortions of this fish, the name may be a corruption of crook. Su. Goth. krok, kroka, to bend. And thus Senecius gives the Icelandic. "krokaell, anguilla contorta, a krokaus, Sax. kroekas, corrugari, item contorqueri."]

There be several sorts or kind of eels; as the silver eel, and green or greenish eel, with which the river of Thames abounds; and those are called grige.

Watson, Angler, ch. 15.

3. A merry creature. [supposed from Greek; the Lat. graculus denoting festive, Dr. Johnson says; rather denoting, trifling, silly. But see the third sense of GRIPE. Grig may be thus adopted from the old Fr. Grigois, which means Greek. Yet the French have not this proverbial expression. "A merry grig or Greek" is, in that language, rendered gale-bon-temps. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood. Some pretend, that the origin of this expression is from the nimble and lively motion of the small eel. I find a "merry cricke," however, to be an expression of at least two centuries' date in our language, and of that word grig may be a corruption. See the third sense of CRICK.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as loutie-ale.

Swift.

4. Health. Shropshire. Grice.

To GRILL. † v. a. [Fr. griller, from gril, a gridiron; grille, an iron grate.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILL. \ adj.* [gryl, horridus. Pr. Parv. The Lat. horridus is used in a similar sense, "cold through fear;" and the Teut. gronvel is horror.] Causing to shake through cold. Obsolete.

They had sufficed cold full stronge
In wetters grille, and dark to sight.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 75.

GRILLADE. n. s. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILL. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt; as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grilled all at Temple-bar.

Hudibras.

GRIM. \ adj.* [Sax. gum, sour, savage, furious; gumman, to rage; Germ. grimmi, furious; grimmen, to rage; Su. Goth. gram, enraged, angry; all which, perhaps, may be referred to the Celt. grim, war, battle. "Nothing is so common through the whole compass of language, as to find a word, which was originally applied in an appropriate sense, afterwards converted into some other term with a different meaning, though with a kindred idea. — Grim, which originally meant war in the dialects of the Celtic, still continued among our ancient poets to be attached to the same subject, though from its accidental similarity to grim, in the sense of ferocious-looking, it was used as an epithet of fear, and oftentimes with a metaphorical application derived from the idea of a furious countenance or menacing form. — In a celebrated passage of Shakespeare we have the addition of the countenance, to which grim was imagined to belong, and the metaphorical imagery arising from this notion; Grim-visag'd War hath smooth'd his wrinkled brow." Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 368. See also GRIM-VISAGED.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim.

Spenser, F. Q.

Grim return yet remissive,
Bound in those gloomy caves with aduminate chains.

Dryden.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thy dear causes

Excite to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Wounds the mortified mind. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?

Milton, P. L.

Expert to turn the sway

Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war. Milton, P. L.

Here we have him in the grimmer dells of a revengeful judge. South, Sermon viii. 204.

Whether it would not be the grimest disposition that ever befel him, to be thrust out of the world with his sins about his ears.

South, Sermon ix. 185.

He that dares to die,

May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant loom.

Sophy.

Their warthy looms would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison, Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him
Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,

This better check gave. Chapman.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakespeare.

GRIM-FACED. \ adj.* [grim and face.]
Having a stern countenance.

Like the grim-faced god of war.

Macpherson, Mag. p. 962.

GRIM-GRINKING. \ adj.* [grim and grim.]
Grinning horribly; as Milton expresses it, a ghastly smile.

Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides she Death), Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean

To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath?

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

He, grim-grinning king,
Who calls us worms, and doth the best surprise,
Late having deck'd up with beauty's rose his tomb,
Disdains to crop a weed, and will not come.

Dromond, Madrigal.

GRIM-VISAGED. \ adj.* [grim and visage.]
Grin-faced. Apparently a favourite expression of our old poets; one of whom Gray has literally followed, in the fine application of it to Despair.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front.

Death-during pestilence did seem to slide,
Grim-visag'd, like the graily denuded night.

Mir, for Moe, p. 777.

I, for my part, grim-visag'd goblin, do no more fear death than I fear my best bliss.

Stafford's Niebe, P. ii. p. 85.

Grim-visag'd Despair.

Yarrington, Two Tragedies in One, (1601.)
Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair.

Gray, Ode on Eton Coll.

GRIMACE. † n. s. [French, from grim.
Dr. Johnson. — Screnius, and Lye in his additions to Junius, refer the word to the Icel. grima, the skin of the face;
but the former also says, that the Icel.
gryma, a mask or hood, in which grim persons concealed the face so as not to be known, affords the best root of grimace.
Bishop Hurd says, that grimace, in the time of Addison, meant, simply, such a turn of the countenance as expressed acquaintance or civility; but because this air of complaisance was assumed, or was taken by our surly countrymen to be assumed, without meaning, the word came to be used, as it is now, in an ill sense, for any affected distortion of features. Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. iii. p. 170. note.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insipience.

He had not spar'd to shew his pinches,
Against th' harangues of politics,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South, Sermon.

The buffoon acts, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Étrange.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a visard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. s. [gris, French, gray, and malin, or little Moll.] Gray little woman; the name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a stinkey gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Phillips.

TO GRIME† v. a. [from the Icel. gryma, the mask, already noticed in grimace. See also Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. GRIMING. "Our peasants call him grime, whose face is covered with spots of dirt, as if he used this as a mask." Dns. Lex. Su. Goth. — Belg. grimen, to daub with spots.] To dirt; to sully deeply; to daub with filth.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shaks.

GRIME† n. s. [from the verb.] Dirt deeply insinuated; sully blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept; for why? she swears: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Callow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward on Fossils.

GRIMLY adv. [from grim.] Having a frightful or hideous look.

When it was grown to dark midnight,
And all were fast asleep,
In came Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at William's feet. Beaumont and Fl. Ks. of the Burn. Poetic.

GRIMLY adv. [from grim.] Having a frightful or hideous look.

When it was grown to dark midnight,
And all were fast asleep,
In came Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at William's feet. Beaumont and Fl. Ks. of the Burn. Poetic.

GRIMLY adv. [from grim.] Having a frightful or hideous look.

We're landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blisters.

Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Prometheus, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor cur'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison, Cato.

2. Sourly; suddenly.

The sugars
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

GRIMNESS† n. s. [Sax. grymness.] Horror; frightfulness of visage.

The grimness of her visage disguised, yet will it be fearful enough. Sp. King, Thanks. Sermon. (1615), p. 26.

GRIM† adj. [from grime.] Dirty; cloudy.

Mince of grimy coal low bid.
More, Song of the Soul, Inf. of Worlds. et. 75.

TO GRIN† v. n. [grynian, grynian, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch; grina, Su. Goth. undoubtedly of the same origin with grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French. At first our own word was gren. "They grynnyden with teeth on hym." Wicliffe, Acts, vii. 54. See also TO GERN.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.
Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakspeare.

What valour wert it, when a curd dog grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away? Shakspeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with pious moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden, Æn.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grin'd their teeth, and cast a belicous view. Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter and to frantic mirth.
Fools grin on fools, and Stoiclike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguinal.

I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlock'd for, and there's an end. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

GRIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him; in's face too.
— O you mistake him: 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats of the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grinace. Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. s. [gryne, gryn, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a rabbit that hasteth to his grin,
Not knowing the peril.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the rabbit shall prevail against him. Job, xviii. 9.

TO GRIND† v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [grynban, grynban, German, Saxon; græna, Icelandic; grincer, French. Our own word at first was grint or grinat. "There shall be weeping and grynnyng of teeth." Wicliffe, St. Luke, xiii. "Grynnyng of teeth." St. Matt. xiii. "Grin with his teeth." Chaucer, C. T.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whosoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. St. Matt. xii. 44.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.
What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meat? Bentley, Sermon.

2. To comminute by the teeth or grinders.

Fierce famine is your lot for this mischief,
Reduc'd to grind the plates on which you feed. Dryden, Æn.

3. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with Time, Shaks thing, said I,
Thy site is dull; what it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty to one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his truck the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryden, Æn.

4. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstaring, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser, F. & G.
Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbuthnot on Dissection.

5. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Another way the Egyptians have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addison.

6. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shovelling and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries increase. Dryden.

TO GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and slaves. Milton, S. A.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smarry foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Revue.

GRINDER† n. s. [Sax. grynbepe.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

Those manacles put upon him were exceedingly inconvenient for a grinder in a mill. Smith on Old Age, p. 113.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Noddy.

Thy hands to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.

3. [grynbo-cofay.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the fore-teeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He the raging lioness comfortably,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey.

Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad at top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments.

Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herbivorous animals, which do ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much.

Arbutnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders tried.

Dryden, Jur.

Both he brought; and bewisht his grinders caught.

Dryden.

GRINDSTONE. * n. s. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. * stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the rounce,
That turn round like grindstones. R. Jonson.
Literature in the grindstone to sharpen the coulers, and to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hedges brighter then, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone till bright. Maron.

GRINDER. n. s. [from grin.] One that grins.

The frightful grinder

He the winner. Addison, Spect. No. 173.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP.† n. s. [Sax. gripan, from gripan, to dig.] A little ditch, or trench. Not peculiar to the north of England, as Ray states; but of general use.

Another will make the grip or fos of the ditch serve for the area of his habitation.

Phil. Survey of the South of Ireland.

To GRIP. * v. s. [from the noun.] To cut into ditches; to drain. "Gripped is devised to draw away water." Yorkshire Glossary.

GAIR, or GRIP. * n. s. [Lat. grappa. See GRIPPIN.] The fabulous animal called the griffin, as Barret defines it; and as Huloet the older lexicographer explains it, "the grype bird." This squares with the old Gothic grip, used for a bird of prey, probably a vulture.

An horrible cage for every foule byrde and fytile grype.

Anderson, Expos. upon Bened. (1573.) fol. 45. b.

Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws.

Shakespeare, Boys of Lucerne.

To GRYPE.† v. a. [greipian, M. Goth.; gripo, Su. Goth.; gripan, Sax.; grypen, Dutch; old French grip or grype, both plunder and the hand; and thus I deduce gripa from grip, an old Gothic word also for the hand.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakespeare, J. Hon.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold.

Dryden, En.

3. [Gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woud'd,
To gripe the gen'ral way into your hands.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. To close; to clutch.

Unluckily Welsted! thy unfeeling master,
The more illou thickly, gripes his hand the faster.

Pope.

5. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the gripped prey. Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd bounds that sought their food;

And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.

Dryden, Fab.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

This fall of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryd.

7. To afflict. This would now be considered a ludicrous usage of the word; but it was formerly not so. See the fourth sense of the substantive GRIPPE.

Griefe gripes me so, I pin'd away, and died.

Mir. for Mag. p. 299.

Whom gripping sorrow doth so sore stain.

Ibid. p. 447.

Grief gripes my heart, when I think that the Mars of men received his death's blow from a pen-maker, a pedagogue.

Steffens's Nicks, (1611.) p. 145.

To GRYPE.† v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money menially.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less and grew stark beggars. Fell.

3. [In naval language.] When a ship runs her head too much into the wind, she is said to gripe.

GRIPPE.† n. s. [gripe, Sax.; grip, old Goth. and French. See To GRYPE.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy.

Spenser, F. Q.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to wrench'd with an unskill'd hand.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stains
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.

Shakespeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.

Dryden, En.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fix'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the brow;

'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryd. Fab.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Free from the gripes of sorrow every one.
Broomes, Brit. Past. i. 3.

Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his bones bound.

Canst thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the gripes of smarting poverty? Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ache; colick.

In the jaundies the colic is wanting; and the icterical have a great sorrow and gripes, with windiness. Fieger.

6. [In naval language.] The compass or sharpness of the prow or stem of a ship under water. Dr. Scott and Dr. Ash have said the stern instead of the stem.

7. [In naval language.] Gripes is the name of a machine formed by an assemblage of ropes, hooks, and dead eyes; and used to secure the boats upon the deck of a ship at sea. Chambers.

GRIPPER. n. s. [from gripe.] Oppressor; user; extortioner.

Others pretend sail, and yet are professed usurers,
grippers, monsters of men, and harpies.

Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPPING. * n. s. [from gripe.]

1. Pain arising from colick.

After certain gripings, the wind and vapours, Issuing forth,—distorted the mouth, blunted the clerks, and gave the eyes a terrible kind of relief.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 8.

2. Distress; affliction.

Whether all the fictitious pleasures of sin can compensate for the acute tortures and gripings of mind. Kellingbeck's Serm. (1730.) p. 561.

GRIPINGLY. adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Cythere help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work grippingly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

GRIPPLE. * adj. [from gripe, in the sense of pinching, merely grasping or hoarding money. Dr. Johnson barely mentions grippe as a substantive, and defines it "a greedy snatcher; a gripping miser;" to which he adds, without an example however, the name of Spenser. Spenser uses the word as an adjective, but not as a substantive.

And there are few words better authorized than this adjective; but as a substantive I have no where found it.]

1. Greedy; covetous; unfeeling; oppressive.

He gnash'd his teeth, to see
Those hopes of gold with grippe covetise.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 31.

It is easy to observe, that none are so greedy and hard-fisted as the clerical.

Bp. Hall, Boles of Glend.

The insatiate slave—
That thrusts his grippe hand into her golden maw.

Dryden, Polyb. S. 3.

The grippe brother, who will bestow nothing on his poor wretches for God's sake, is evidently an isual, having none at all or very headless no count of God.

Barrow, Works, l. 438.
To bestow again in good earnest on the magistrate, we know your claudic friendship is too grapple, for ye are always begging.

Milton, Art. of Peace bene. B. of Orm. & Irish.

2. Grasping fast; tenacious.
On his shield he grise hold did lay,
And held the same so hard, that by no wise

He could him force to loose. Spens. F. Q. v. l. r. 6.

GRIPPLENESS. * n. s. [from grapple.] Co-vetousness.

Age is not a more common plea than unjust;
The young man pretends it for his woman and inordinate lust; the old, for his grappleless, technicous, loquacity: all wrongfully, and not without foul abuse. Dp. Holt, Temp. Bepelled, ill. § 10.

GRIS. * n. s. [Fr. gris; low Lat. griseum, "pellis animalis cujusdam, quod vulgo Galli appellant." Du Cange.] A kind of fur; one of the better sorts of fur. See MINIVER.

I saw his sleeves purified at the hood
With gris, and that the finest of the loind.

Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

GRIS-A-MURR. n. s. Used by Milton for ambergris.

Boats of chase, or fowl of game,
In gusty built, or from the spit, or bell'd,
Gris-amur steam'd.

Milton, P. R.

GRIS. * n. s.

1. A swine. See GRICE.

2. A step, or scale of steps. See GRIS and GREES. Barret writes it "grises or steps."

Let me speak like yourself; and say a sentence,
Which as a rise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GRIS-ETTE. * n. s. [French.] The wife or daughter of a tradesman.

She was the handmaid grise I ever saw.

Borne, Sentin. Journey.

GRISKIN. * n. s. [griskin, roast meat, Irish. Dr. Johnson.—This etymology may apply to a beef-steak when dressed, or to any other, as well as a griskin; and therefore, notwithstanding Lye endeavours to support it by adding that griskin may be from gris, fire, the etymon must be sought elsewhere; and there can be no question that it is from gris, grise, or grice, a swine.] The vertebra of a hog broiled. Dr. Johnson says; in any way, it may be added, raw, fried, or roasted. It is not the cookery that confers the name.

GRISLED. * See GRIZZLED.

GRISLY. * adj. [xpuric, Sax.; xzipran, to affright; griseigle, Goth. horrible; griseigle, Iceland. horribly. Bullock defines grisly also adverbially, viz. abominably, fearfully. Expos. ed. 1656. But I find no usage of it.] Drendful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.

Spenser, F. Q.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toudstool grown there might I see.

Spenser.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The grisly glare of a convicting conscience.

Dp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 41.

Back stepp'd those two fair angels, half amon.
So sudden to behold the grisly king;

Yet thus, unmor'd with fear, account him soon.

Milton, P. L.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop

Under the sooty flag of Acheron. Milton, P. L.
The besutefous form of fight
Is chang'd, and, and was appears a grisly sight.

Dryden, Fob.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race.

Dryden, State of Innocence.

Thus the grisly spectre spoke again. Dryden, Fob.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground;
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound. Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear. Addison.

GRISONS. * n. s. Inhabitants of the mountainous parts of the Alps in Italy.

There is the noblest summer-prospect in the world from this walk, for you have a full view of a huge range of mountains that lie in the country of the Grisons, and are buried in snow.

Addison on Italy.

GRIST. * n. s. [xpurc, Saxon; the past participle of xepiran, to crush. Mr. H.

took.]

1. Corn to be ground.
Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water.

Tutser, Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholars' halls.

Miller of Trompington.

2. Supply; provision.
Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;

And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist.

Swift.

3. Grist to the mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all astronomical cases, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

GRISTLE. n. s. [xpuric, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skiny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give to the dilatation of the gullet.

Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten out from the lung-pipes.

Mort against Aithon.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which is a grisly windpipe.

Greiv.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its grisly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.

Blackmore.

GRIT. * n. s.

1. The coarse part of meal. [xput, xputra, Sax.; grize, Teut.; grad, German; from xputr.]

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles. [grit, Welsh; xpeot, Sax.; grit, gryt, Goth.] Siliceous balls, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and resist marble.

Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; with several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disintegrated by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with saltwater, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and calcifies into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disintegrated by water. This is the pulvis putcolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocolle of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

Dryden, Juv.

GRIZZLY, adj. [from gris, gray, French.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in mice, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN† v. n. [spanish, Saxon; gromen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Our word was at first used in the sense of groant. To groin was the same. So the Iceland. grein has the same meaning.
"He groaneth as our boar." Chaucer, Somp. Tale. This will refer us to the Latin grunio. The northern pronunciation of groan is according to the Sax.
grune. See To GRAIN, and To GROIN.
To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,

GROCER† n. s. [This should be written grocer, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.
Dr. Johnson. — Though grossus means a green and not a dried fig; grossiers or grocers were certainly dealers in foreign fruits and other foreign commodities.
See the Paston Letters, ii. 210. The merchants, called grocers, were accused of engrossing merchandise of all kinds,
Stat. 37 Edw. III. ch. 5. See Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 291. Our lexicography of more than two centuries since describes the grocers as those "who sell by the great." Huloet.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts, Logic.

By rare artificers carved into story and a grotesque work. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 139.

The champion lawn, whose lairy sides With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton, P. L.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a face is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a face are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden, The French.

An hideous figure of their faces they drew, } Nor lions, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours } true, } And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors, Grotesque roof, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTESQUE, * n. s. A wild design of a painter or engraver.

Faustors — sometimes do serve themselves of instances that have no existence in nature. — What indeed was more common and familiar among the Romans themselves than the picture and statue of Terminus, even one of their deities; which yet, if we well consider, is but a piece of grotesque? Watson, Elements of Architecture.

Farce is that in poetry, which grotesque is in a picture. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

All the designs I have chanced to meet of the temptations of St. Antony, were rather a sort of wild grotesques, than any thing capable of producing a serious passion. Burke on the Sublime and Beautiful.

GROTESQUELY, * adv. [from grotesque.] In a wild, fantastical manner.

Death has dispossessed the jester of his habitations, and grotesquely decorated himself therewith. Espl. of Holbein's Dance of Death, p. 49.

GROTTA, * n. s. [Italian.] A cavern for coolness or pleasure.

Let it be turned to a grotta, or place of shade. Bacon, Ess. (1632), p. 263.

She turned into another walk, which led to a grotta. Moral State of Eng. (1670), p. 153.

GROTTA, n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool *grotto*s run, The bow'r's of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils. GROVE, f. n. s. [Sax. gropu; Germ. grove; Goth. grof.] A small wood, or place set with trees.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought The wood began to move!

Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say a moving grove. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Baniak'd from courts and love, Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast, While every grace is peace and every grace is melody? Thomson, Spring.

To GROVEL, f. v. n. [grufle, Icelandic, flat on the face. It may, perhaps, come by gradual corruption from ground fell. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Ice. verb gravel, to lie prostrate on the ground. Lye.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-hand passed wrought, And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground He grovelling fell, all gored to his gushing wound. Spenser, F. Q.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem, Includ'd with all the honours of the world! If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face, Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Old-mast and beech, and cornel fruit they eat, Grovelling like swine on earth, in fowls' nest. Chapman.

Upon thy belly grovelling thou shalt go. Milton, P. L.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim what he can express; His grovelling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and grovelling. Addison, Spect.

GROVELLER, * n. s. [from grovel.] A person of a low, mean, grovelling disposition.

The man of a towering ambition, or a well regulated taste, has fewer objects to envy or to covet than the groveller. Shenstone.

GROVES, * n. s. pl. The northern word for what is elsewhere called groves. See the second sense of GRAVE. And Brockett's N. C. words.

GROUND, f. n. s. [gryund, Saxon; grondi, Danish; grundus, M. Goth. "consentientibus omnibus dialect. Scytho-Scandianis." Serenius.]

1. The earth considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground.

Milton, P. L.

From the other hill
To their 52<sup>d</sup> station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton, P. L.

A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton, P. L.
And yet so nimbly he would bound
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremias.

There was dew upon all the ground. Judges, vi. 40.

They summ'd their wings, and, soaring 'th' air sublime,
With clang despoil'd the ground. Milton, P. L.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden, An.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.

On heavenly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton, P. L.

With these came they, who from the lord's ring floor

Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Asharoth. Milton, P. L.

5. Estate; possession.

Unhappy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds;
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryden, Jus.

6. Land occupied.

The rains o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Prior.

7. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Sam. ii. 32.
Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Sam. v. 4.

A multitude sit on the ground. St. Matt. xv. 35.

Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown, Travels.

8. Depth; bottom. [af-grundith, the deep,
Goth. St. Luke, viii. 31.]

In the ground of the sea. Lth. Fer. fol. 9. b.

9. Drege; lees; fices; that which settles at the bottom of liquors. In the plural only.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grains. Merriner.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping graveyards, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp, Surgery.

10. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds,

as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden, DuFrenoy.

11. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

O'er his head
A well wrought heav'n of silk and gold was spread.
Assure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright. Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

12. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descent. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

13. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

14. The first principles of knowledge.

The grounds will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in.

Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Dennie.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectively, he doth it not irresistibly. Hemmond.

After evening repasts, all bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton, on Education.

15. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.
In the solution of the Substantive's objection,
my method shall be, to examine in the first place,
the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton, P. L.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wittius.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there it is the ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Ketticwell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Dryft.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

16. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed when these men rose;
And ev'n with this the act thy death did bring;
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.

17. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Hearless they fought, and quitted soon their grounds,
While ours with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Coudé at the battle of Seneffe. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

18. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from the river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels,

Superior think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison, Spect.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.

19. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probability. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the more enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

20. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage, as the rumpas, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden, DuFrenoy.

21. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.

22. Formerly the pit of a play-house; and hence grounding, in a contemptuous sense. See GROUNDING.

Sign-herald. The understanding gentlemen o' the ground here asked my judgment. B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

TO GROUND,† &c. [from the noun.]

1. To place or set in the ground.

And friendship which a faint affection breeds
Without regard of good, does like ill ground needs. Spenser, F. Q. iv. li. 1.

2. To fix on the ground. A kind of military phrase; as, to ground arms.

When the fairs are thus discharged, the word of command in cause is to ground their fans.

Addison, Spect. No. 102.

3. To found, as, upon cause, reason, or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison.

Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodox primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's day, and of other Christian holidays upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment.

Whate.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with.

Bogis.

If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound.

Dryden, Aurengzeb.

Some eminent spirits, having signalized his valor, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rarely incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude.

Swift.

4. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Ezek. iii. 17.

GROUND. The preterite and part. pass.

of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground

And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. s. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew.

Dryden, Ru.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GROUND-BAIT. n. s. [ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and cast to fish.

Walton, Angler.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. s. [ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. s. [Hedera terrestris, Lat.] Alehoof, or tuinhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us.

Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. s. [ground and oak.]

If the planks of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops either of barrel or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash.

Mortimer.

GROUND-PINE. n. s. [Chamaepitys, Lat.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road-sides.

GROUND-PLATE. n. s. [In architecture.]

The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer, and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist.

Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summers, and beams.

Mortimer.

GROUND-PLOT. † n. s.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can't thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

A ground-plot square five hives of bees contain; Emblem of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building.

Men skilled in architecture might do what we did not attempt; they might probably form an exact ground-plot of this venerable edifice.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

GROUND-RENT. n. s. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds.

Arbuthnot on Census.

The site was neither granted him, nor given;

'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GROUND-ROOM. n. s. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room: for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him.

For.

GROUND-TACKLE. n. s. In naval language, the anchor, cables, and whatsoever else is necessary, to make the ship ride safe at anchor in a proper ground.

GROUNDAGE. n. s. [from ground.] A custom, or tribute, paid for the standing of a ship in port.

Blount.

It is ordinary to take custom for anchorage, groundage, &c.

Sydenham.

GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Upon firm principles; upon good grounds.

Whether be performed by former promise—that can I not groundlessly tell.

Butler, in Leland's N. Year's Gift, sign. H. 2.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly; and to the purpose, upon this subject.

Frederick.

GROUNDLESSLY. adj. [Sax. grymblear.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

Do not dear foolish boys, groundless fear.

Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them.

Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may show how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them of being averse to our national worship.

Frederick.

GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason

This principle of feigningly or groundlessly conceiving.

More, avoid, against Industry, ch. 2. Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors.

Boyle on Colours.

To doubt and deny thus groundlessly, and licentiously, or perversely, is not so much properly to doubt, plainly to show an unwillingness we have that the thing we dispute about should be true; which is cowardly and disingenuous.

Goodman, Wint. Ec. Conf. P. ii.

GROUNDLESSNESS. † n. s. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

I shall close up this chapter with remarking the groundlessness of that tradition, which makes Mahomed to be put into a iron chest, that, by the force of loadstones, hangs in the air.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 81.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falsehood and groundlessness of his calumny.

Tytus.

GROUND'LING. n. s. [from ground: German, grundel; Teut. gründling.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the vulgar. See the last sense of the substantive GROUND.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious perriwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

And there we must step before you thick-skinned tanners,

For we are born three stories high: no base ones, None of your groundlings, master.

Benson, and Fl. The Prophetess.

GROUND'LY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use.

A man, groundedly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by example to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room.

Acham.

GROUNDSELL. n. s. [ground and sell, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsell, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsell is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Mason, Mech. Es.

GROUNDSELL. n. s. [senecio, Lat.; grymble, grymble, grymble, Saxon; and our old ichnography writes this word groundswell, as well as groundsell. See Sherwood's Dict.] A plant.

Barret, Adv. (1580.)

GROUNDWORK. n. s. [ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in Lucan's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And roars by the name of milky knee.

The groundwork is of starry gold. Dryden, Fob.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper their such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience.

Milton on Education.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Synonym on Ireland.

The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUPE n. s. [grouper, French; grouper, Italian, a knot, or cluster.] An assemblage of two or more figures of men, beasts, fruit, or the like, which have some apparent relation to each other in painting or sculpture; hence, generally, a cluster; a collection; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zelus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers bidding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.

You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.

This group of idles is, to use Mr. Waller's expression, walled round with rocks, which render them inaccessible to pirates or enemies. By Berkeley, Prop. for Cal. in Berns. (1735.)

But here, thou say'st, the miseries of life Are buddled in a group. Young, Night Th. 8.

To GROUPE v. a. [groupper, Fr.] To put into a distinct or separate collection.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colour. Prior.

GROUSE n. s. [perhaps from gorse. See GORCOCK.] A kind of fowl; a heathcock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT n. s. [grut, Sax. See GRIT, and GROAT.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardicute, 'midst Danes and Saxons etout, Carous'd in suit-brown ale, and din'd on grouse: Which dish his princely honour still retains, And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. Atin.

2. That which purges off; wort; sweet liquor. In Cheshire, poor small beer. Wilbraham.

Sweet grove, or whig, his bottle had, as much as it might hold. Warner, Athin's England.

venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us

we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiacum.

Hill.

The acid spirit in tar-water possesses the virtues, in an eminent degree, of that of guaiacum, and other medicinal woods. Bp. Berkeley, Siva, § 47.

GUARANTEE. † n. s. [garant, French.

The substantive and the verb are indifferentely written guarantee, and guar- anty.]

1. A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings: and he is also the guardian and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Lesey.

2. Engagement to secure the performance of articles.

It was made in contradiction to the engagements that the crown of England had taken, when King

William gave his guaranty to the treaty of Tre-vendhall. Ld. Bolingbroke.

To GUA'RANTY. † v. a. [garantir, French.]

To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

France hath always profited skilfully of its having guaranteed the treaty of Munster.

Ld. Chesham.

Publick treaties made under the sanction, and some of them guaranteed by the sovereign powers of other nations. Burke on French Affairs.

To GUARD. † v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the u being changed

by the French into g; as Galles for

Wales, Dr. Johnson.—The French probably adopted it from the low Lat. wardo, wardo, or garda. Goth. varda, and

wardian. See To WARD.]

1. To watch by way of defence and accuracy.

Who by strength

Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd

The guarded gold. Milton, P. L.

To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.

The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms. Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.

One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to.

Addison, Spect.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guaranteed every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Brown on the Odyssey.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders.

Give him a livery

More guaranteed than his fellows.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

See a fellow

In a long motley guaranteed with yellow.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

6. Minshew says, that "the guard of a garment" is so called, "because it guards and keeps the garment from tearing."

It is not, however, improbable that guard

(for so our old authors write it) is, in this sense, another form of ward, to fasten

by binding. See To GUARD. Yet

Dr. Johnson makes no distinction.

How brave is he? in a guard coat?

Dr. Johnson, Barthol. Fair.

Some of you have not your rich suits guar- anteed. Bp. Hall, Centurion, B. 4.

Within this year or two, I hope we shall be called to be examiners, wear politic gowns guarded with copper lace, making great faces full of fear and office. Reum. and Fl. Woman-Hater.

TO GUARD. v. n. To be in a state of caution or defence.

To GUBERNATE. * v. a. [Lat. gubernare.]
To govern. Cochran.
GUBERNATION. n. s. [gubernatio, Lat.]
Government; superintendency; superior direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of man and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, isolated by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation.
Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

GUBERNATIVE. * adj. [from gubernare.]
Governing; ruling.

He talked to him of real and gubernative wisdom. Hacker's Life of St. Williams, (1695), p. 59.
GUGUON. * n. s. [goujon, French]. Our own word was formerly gogoon, or gogoon. Hulot's Diet.

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

To true, no turbots dignify my boards;
But gugoons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Page.

2. A man easily cheated.
This he did to draw you in, like so many gugoons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurement: gugoons being commonly used as baits for pike, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Shakespeare. The old phrase, it may be added, was "to swallow a gugoon," i. e. to be deceived, est re beffé. Sherwood's Diet.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gugoon, this opinion.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
Such as Gregory or Bode were, who being loquent, and with credulous, and trusting others, needlessly many a gugoon.

Pearson, Antiq. over Newcastle, (1619), p. 96.
Buchanan would not swallow that gugoon of a British consul.

By. Lloyd, Hist. of Ch. Geo. in Gr. Brit. (1684), Pref.
4. An iron pin on which a wheel turns.

Many times the iron gugoons grow hot for want of greasing.

Hist. of making Gunpowder, Syard's Hist. R. S. p. 281.

GUELDER-ROSE. * See GELDER-ROSE.

GUELFS. * n. s. pl. The name of a faction in Italy, formerly opposed to that of the Gibellines. See GIBELLINES.

Addison, Spect. No. 125.

GUERDON. * n. s. [guerdon, French; from the Teut. werd, or werth, price, value.] A reward; a recompence, in a good and bad sense. A word now rarely if at all used.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself no mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misdeigning her true knight to be.
Spenser, F. Q.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive
The just guerdon of all his former villanies. Andres.

Pace is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To ecstacy delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon where we hope to find,
And think to burst out on sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred sheers,
And cuts the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.

To GUERDON. * v. a. [old Fr. guerdonner; and one of our own old verbs. Chaucer uses it.] To reward. Obsolete.

We vow to guerdon it with such due grace,
As shall become our bounty, and thy place.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
See you well guerdon'd for these good deeds.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. Pt. II.

GUERDONABLE. * adj. [from guerdon.]
Worthy of reward. Obsolete.

Sir G. Buch, Hist. Rich. III. p. 75.

GUERDONLESS. * adj. [guerdon and less.] Unrewarded. Obsolete. Bullcock.

Guerdonless he past.
Chaucer, Conq. of the Bl. Knight, ver. 400.

To GUESS. * v. n. [ghissen, Dutch; ghissen, German. Junius refers to the Danish gietle, to make conjecture; Scenarius, to the Saxon gæcan, to divine, from the Goth. gaeta, whence the Icel. giska, q. d. gaetska. Lye, however, prefers the Irish geasam, to conjecture, to divine.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgement.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Shakespeare.
Let not your ears despite my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should be not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment?

Balegh, Hist.
Their issue swarming hands
Of anubus'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxcalian enemies I guess.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.
The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior delites, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true Good.

Stillingfleet.

To GUESS. * v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgement.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart.

Lodges.
GUESS. n. s. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgement without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.

Shakespeare.
His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's.

A poet must confess
His art's like physics, but a happy guess. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason.

Lodges.
This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confute. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess;
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUESSEB. n. s. [from gues.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guesseers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Page.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor.

To give thee here a cleaver, a nitre and roset, Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee to a guesseer. Swift.

GUESSEINGLY. * adv. [from guesseing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.
I have a letter guesseingly set down.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GUEST. * n. s. [gæst, gæst, gæst, Saxon; gæst, Goth. gæst, Icel. gæst, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

St. Luke, xiv. 7.

Metinks a father
Is at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tail.
Tell my royal guest
I add to his commands my own request.

Dryden, Jcn.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O dears, dears! how fit a guest am I for you,
since my heart can people you with wild reverent beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

That play'd or on her tip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds drop. Shakespeare.

To GUEST. * v. n. To be entertained in the house or at the table of another.

A young man at that time guested in her father's house. Heywood, Hierarch. of Angels, 1635, p. 479.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. s. [Guest and chamber.]

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall ent the parson with my disciples? St. Mark, xiv. 14.

GUESTRITE. n. s. [from guest and rite.]
Officers due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black feet that guest-rite to the war.

Chapman.

GU'ESTWISE. * adv. [guest and wise.] In the manner of a guest.

My heart with her, but as guest-wise, sojourn'd.
Shakespeare, Mid. Night Dream.

To GU'GALE. v. n. [gorgogliare, Italian.]
To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouth'd vessel.

GU'IDABLE. * adj. [from guide.] That may be governed by counsel.

A cultivated and guidable spirit, a disposition easy to all.

Spratt, Sermon before the King, (1676), p. 11.

GU'DAGE. n. s. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide.

Ainsworth.
GU'DANCE. n. s. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking.

This is to the young — but thy experience's age Wants not the guidance of a former age. Swind.
A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he governs from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party.

TO GUIDE.† v. a. [guide, French; guier, guyer, old French; whence our ancient word gie for guide. See TO GIVE. Serenius traces guide to the Icel. geia, the diminutive of gæ, to take heed.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. St. John, xxi. 13

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers. Decoy of Pity.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the world.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this guide guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest reasons are not to be put up. Kitchin.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me. Psalms xxxi. 3.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women regulate that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decoy of Pity.

GUIDE. n. s. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.
Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than led by a false guide to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him on an happy guide. Waller.
They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God, by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden.

GUI'DELESS.† adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or superintendant.

Thus leave this guideless realm an open prey
To endless storms, and waste of civil war.

Lockville. Corbado, v. 2. (1561.)
Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd
To his new guideless kingdom peace bequest'd.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUI'DEPOST.* n. s. [from guide and post.] A post, where two or more roads meet, directing the traveller which to follow.

Great men are the guideposts and marks in the state. Burke, Sp. on Americ. Taxation.

GUI'DER.† n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says, meaning as to the preceding sense. But guiders are still applied to the word tendons in the north of England. Craven Dialect.

Our guide come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakespeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an impostume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so sublimed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge thanks for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guide of his hand. South.

GUI'DERESS.* n. s. [from guide.] She who guides or directs. Obsolete.

In earth she alone to be their guideress. Casson, Pilgrimage of the Soul, (1482.)

Ab! fickle and blind guideless of the world,
What pleasure hast thou in my misery? Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

GUIDON.† n. s. [French; from guide, to direct, to shew.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

On the east wall hangs his target, coat of arms and crest, and near unto them a guidon of the Order of the Bath. Ashmole, Berk. ii. 577.

GUID.† n. s. [Saxon, gub, tribute, from giban, to pay; fraternities originally contributing sums towards a common stock; gylcpe, a fellowship, a corporation. The word is found in various tongues; old French gilde, société, Lacombe; Teut. gilde, societas, confratium, Kilian; Icel. gilde, convivium, symposium, Serenius. The last as perhaps a disorderly meeting, deviating from the original plan of sober combination into the extravagancies of unrestrained festivity.]

1. A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonality of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Concel.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale, Orig. of Manu.

As when the long-eared milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple-bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent fash they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope, Dunciad.

2. A townhall.

The room was long and wide,
As it some gold or solemn temple were. Spenner, F. Q. ii. vii. 45.

GUI'DABLE.* adj. [from guide.] Liable to tax.

By the discretion of the sheriff, and bailiff, and other ministers, in places guideable. Speelman, Adm. Jur.

GUILDHALL.* n. s. [from guild.] The hall in which a corporation usually assembles; a townhall.

The mayor towards guildhall hies him in all post. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the guildhall affords. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GUILD.† n. s. [guide, gille, old French the same with gild. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. gylhan, ge-gylhan, to conjure, to divine; consequently, he says, to practise cheat and imposture. Div. of Purley, ii. 324. — The Dutch gylen, the low German, begelén, to beguile, and the Su. Goth. gila, to deceive, to entrap in snares, must be also remembered; Icel. við, deception. Barbazan says, that the old French word is derived from the Arabic, and that it was anciently written ghild. Diss. sur la Langue Fran. Our word is rarely used in the plural, but it occurs in Shelton's Transl. of Don Quixote, P. iv. ch. vi. "If his gildes be not at the beginning detected." Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fewning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor. Spenser, F. Q.

Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile. St. John, i. 47.

When I have most need to employ a guile,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton, P. L.
Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn;
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton, P. L.

TO GUILD.* v. a. [Fr. guiller, guiler; which Barbazan deduces from the Lat. relare.] To disguise cunningly; to conceal.

For who writes not that woman's subtilties
Can guilen Angles? Spenser, F. Q. lii. li. 7.

Or only a fair shew to guile his mischiefs?
Is it repentance, Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

GUI'LED.* adj. [from guile.] Treacherous; deceiving. Not proper.

Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

GUI'LEFUL.* adj. [Guile and full.]

1. Willy; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skillful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeding, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton, P. L.
The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden, Aen.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I trad'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Banianus lay.

Thou Andronicus.

GUILEFULLY.† adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

He cannot be excused, in that he caused out his friends to restore the money which they had guilefully borrowed. Malvo. on Providence, p. 311.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd.

Milton, P. L.

GUILEFULNESS.† n. s. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

Sherwood.

GUILELESS.† adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

And the plain ox,
That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
In what has he offended? Thomson, Spring.

I chid'd the guileless daughters of the plain,
Nor dropp'd the chace, till Jesse was my prey.

Sheraton, Eccl. 26.

GUILELESSNESS.† n. s. [from guileless.] Freedom from deceit; pure honesty and innocence.

GUILER.† n. s. [from guile.] Norm. Fr. gyleur.] A deceiver; one that betrays into danger by insidious practices.

In the late times there schulen come gyleurs, wandering after their own desires.

Wycliffe, St. Jude, ver. 18.

Where those two guilers with Mallico were

Spenser, F. Q.

But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Nor suffered lust his safety to betray;

So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.

Spenser, F. Q.

GUILLotine.† n. s. [French. Said to be the invention of one Dr. Guillotine, at the early part of the French democratical revolution, viz. in 1792, who himself suffered under the machine. It was, however, nothing more than a slight improvement on an ancient instrument, formerly used both in Scotland and England, for beheading criminals.] A machine for separating, at one stroke, the head of a person from the body.

A bloody ruffian, who, whilst he is receiving their homage, is measuring them with his eye, and fitting to their size the slider of his guillotine.

Burke on a Republick France.

Yes; to my country's justice I appeal,
Nor dread the press, the guillotine, nor wheel.

Parnassus of Literature, P. ii.

To GUILLotine.† v. a. [from the noun.] To decapitate by the guillotine.

Had you been guillotinied by Robespierre.

Br. Watson, Ayl. for the Bb. in Lett. to T. Paine, L. 1.

GUILT.† n. s. [xyle, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself. Dr. Johnson.—Guilt is xy-pelex, guiled, guild, guilt; the past participle of xy-pehan. And to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been guiled, or, as we now say, beguiled; as wicked means be-witched, or bewitched. To pronounce guilt is indeed to pronounce wicked. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parley, ii. 324.

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the klog for this execution. Bacon, Hen. VII.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Come print up guilt

Rive your concealing countenances, and ask Those dreadful summoners grace. Shak. L. Lear.

GUILT-SICK.† adj. [guilt and sick.] Diseased by guilt.

Then we live indeed,
When we can go to rest without alarm
Given every minute to a guilt-sick conscience
To keep us waking, and rise in the morning
Secure in being innocent.

Brown and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

GUILTILY.† adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The satire should be like the porcupine,
That shoots sharp quills out in each angry line,
And wounds the blushing cheek, and fiery eye,
Of him that hears, and reads guiltily.

This leprous soul, that spits guiltily, but yet comfortably, your determination upon it.

Hall, Sat. v. 3.

GUILTINESS.† n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a
feartful guiltiness than of a humble faithfulness.

Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny;
O, in the little clock on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaks.

GUILTLESS.† adj. [from guilt.] 1. Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands;
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltier of the accusing.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, sweet reproach. Shakespeare, Othello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity,
and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

Ysaiah, v. 31.

Thou, who dost all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wiltest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom.

Wycliffe.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid.

Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryd.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When I have approach'd me under friendship's name.

Pope.

2. Unpolluted.

Such guiltless tools as Art yet rude,
Guiltless of fire, had form'd. Milton, P. L.

This bush of yellow beard, this length of hair,
Which from my birth inviolate I bear,
Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,
Shall fall a plenteous crop, reserv'd for thee.

Dryden, Fob.

3. Having no experience.

Heffers guiltless of the yoke. Pope, Hud.

GUILTLESSLY.† adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUILTLESSNESS.† n. s. [from guiltless.]

Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death,
of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than that any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTY.† adj. [xyle, Saxon, condemned to pay a fine for an offence.

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he be-trought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xli. 21.

Mark'd you not

How that the guilty kindred of the queen Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shakespeare.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life;
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryd.

Farwell the stones

And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.

Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thom.

3. Conscious.

I'll give out all he does is dictated from other men, and swear it too, if thou't ha'me; and that I know the time and place where he stole it, though my soul be guilty of no such thing.

H. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

When we are not guilty to ourselves. Tillotson.

GUILTY-LIKE.† adv. [guilty and like.]

Guiltyly.

Cassio, my lord! No sure I cannot think it,
That he would steal away to guilty like seeing you come. Shakespeare, Othello.

GUINÉE.† v. s. See WIMPLE.

GUINÉE.† n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.

"They [the ships belonging to the African company] brought home such store of gold that administered the first occasion for the coining of those pieces, which from thence had the denomination of guineas; and what was afterwards made of the same species, was coined of the gold that was brought from that coast by the royal company." Lord Clarendon's Life, vol. ii. p. 376.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the woad:

Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUINNEADROPPER.† n. s. [guinea and drop.]

One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guinneadropper's bait regards,

Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cords.

Gay.

GUINNEAHEN.† n. s. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUINNEAPEPPER.† n. s. [capicum, Latin.]

GU'NEAPI. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GU'NIAD.* n. s. [Welsh, greyen, white.] A name for the fish called whiting.

GUISE. n. s. [The same with wise; guise, French; pijs, Saxon, the p or u being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own size, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant, and beguile the wise. Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise;
And, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton, P. L.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God aright. Milton, P. L.

Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod.

Of lighter toes and such courtier guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton, Comus.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Merc.

2. Practice; custom; property.
I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the fool, and moves the wise. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. B. Jonon.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To light the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hogemon were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GU'NER.* n. s. [from guise, dress; or from the Teut. guyse, a scoff.] Nummers, who go about at Christmas; persons in disguise. Used in Derbyshire, according to Pegge. See MEMMER.

GUIITA'N.* n. s. [guitarra, Italian; guitare, French; guitarra, Spanish; kitar, Arab; cithara, Lat.; μάζα, Gr. whence guitern, and cithern, old English. "The sheda has six strings, and is of the same species with the kitar; whence our guitar, from the Spanish guitarra, seems to have been borrowed; as it was a favourite instrument with the Arabian conquerors of Spain." Richardson on the Languages, &c. of Eastern Nations, ch. 3. sect. 6. The ancient μάζα is said to have had four strings; and the Persian ciar, four, and tar, a string, has been mentioned as the etymon of this instrument in that language. See Bp. Chandler's Vindication of the Defence of Christianity, vol. i. p. 51.] A stringed instrument of music.

Salads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prar.

TO GULCH.* v. n. [Icel. gule, gula, bucca; gulpa, buccis vorare ductus; Su. Vulg. goelka, avide deglutendo devorare. Srenius. Teut. gulgich, voracious.] To swallow voraciously.

Conveys his burden and the waves
To gulching seas dash cast. Turberville, Mont. Ed. 2.

GULCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A glutting. A word of contempt.

Then you'll know us, you'll see us then, you will, gulch, you will. B. Jonon, Poetaster.
Appet. You muddy gulcher, dar't look me in the face? —

Crap. Good Appetites —
Appet. Peace, you fat bawson.

2. The act of devouring.

Then has he most cruelly upon the hip, and brings me over with a most deadly gulch. Eichard, Or. Const. of the Clergy, lib. p. 41.

GULCH.† adj. [Fr. gucule; generally supposed to be from the Lat. gula, the throat, the colour of which is usually red. The word has been little noticed beyond the jargon of heraldry; though one of our old dramatists introduced guled for made red. Milton also uses "guly dragons" for red dragons, in his first book of Reformation in England. But this again is heraldic language.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gulch;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakespeare, Titon.

He whose subtle arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble,
When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now is he total gules. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Come, sons of honour,
True virtue's heirs; thus hatch'd with Britain blood,
Let's march to rest, and set in gules like suns. Beaumont, and Fl. Bonduca.

GULF.† n. s. [golfe, Fr.; gulf, has Bret.; golfo, Ital.; κάλυξ, Greek.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatic.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy course with easy pace
To yawning gulch of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser, F. Q.

I know thou'd'st rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulch.
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare, Coriol.

This is the gulch through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bradley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as force
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shaks. Hen. V.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Whistles mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravens salt sea shark;
Roar of lioness, digg'd it's dark. Shaks. Macb.
GULF.† adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.

Who so had seen them on the gulfish flood,
He would have thought some Delos now againe,
Some towne, some cliffe, or some desert wood,
Or some new unknowne world from shores of Spain.

Launches out to seas. Mir. to Mag. p. 816.
Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun.

Milton, Pae. Es.
At their native realms the Greeks arrive,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And 'scap'd the perils of the gulfy main.

Pope, Odyssey.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle
Fronts the deep roar of disemboing Nile.

Pope, Odyssey.

GU'LIST.* n. s. [from gulo, Latin.] A glutton. An unusual word, as glutosity also is, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into the dictionary.

The glutinous satiety of our swelling gulsit, argues the necessity of their offending by forgetfulness. Frost's Hon. of Charity, (1688) p. 12.

TO GULL.* v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a new word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Yet love these worries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gul'd twice or three over, and as often ensnared in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth's vain woe,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trust'd;
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own shade,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULF.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gulf, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shaks. Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gulf. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A stupid animal; one easily cheated; being led by us as we do so.

As that ungente gulf, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Why have you suffer'd me to be impris'd? Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gulf
That e'er invention play'd on? Shaks. Tw. Night.

His very touching ought that is learned, soils it, and lays him still more and more open, a conspicuous gulf. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Diviner.

That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such guls as you. Hudibras.

3. A scen-bird. [mergas.] Probably from gulo, as the bird is voracious feeder.

I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gulf,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Shakespeare, Timon.

GULLCATCHER. n. s. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

GULLER. n. s. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

GULLERY. n. s. [from gull.] A cheat; imposture.

Leo Decimus, that scoffing pope, took an extraordinary delight in humouring of silly fellows, and to put gulleries upon them.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

There hath been not long since, within the compass of these twenty years, a merry gullery put upon the world, concerning a guild of men, who style themselves The Brethren of the Illusic Cross.

There never was so gross a gullery in the world as this. Sp. Hall, Rem. p. 402.

Ha, ha! good gullery; he does it well! I faith.

Benson, and Fl. W. at several Weapons.

Gulleries, wherewith poor mortals are befooled and cheated. Sp. Rest, Discourse of Truth, t. 2.

GULLET. n. s. [goulet, Fr.; gulle, Lat.]

1. The throat; a passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the oesophagus.

It might be his doom,

One day to sing,

With gullet in string. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipe; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are without wimons, as whales and cetaceous animals.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd, By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its liquid coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet.

Arbuthnot.

2. A small stream or lake. Not now in use.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Hesiod.

A deep, unpassable gullet of water, without bridge, ford, or ferry. Fuller, Holy War, p. 253.

GULLIBILITY. n. s. [from gull.] Credulity; a low expression, sometimes used for credulibility.

GULLIGUT. n. s. [gulo, Lat. "gulus, gulligut, belly-god, Ainsworth; gulligut, Fr.] A glutton. A low word.

Barret, and Sherwood.

GULLISH. adj. [from gull.] Foolish; stupid; absurd.

They have most part some gullish humour or other, by which they are led: one is an epirure, an atheist; a second, a gamester; a third, a whoremaster; fit subjects all for a misir to work upon.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GULLISHNESS. n. s. [from gullish.] Foolishness; stupidity.

To the end his price might never awaken or rouse himself from out his dreamy and shameful letho-sleep, and, by opening his eyes, come to the knowledge of his own stolidity, idiomity, and gullishness, so to discover others' treacherous ambition, he had filled his court with flatterers.

Tr. of Boetius, (1626), p. 97.

TO GULLY. v. n. [corrupted from gulle.] To run with noise.

GULLY. n. s. [goulet, Fr.] a deep gutter of water, Cotgrave; gulle, old Germ.; standing water, a kind of pool.]

1. A sort of ditch.

The violent rain which had fallen in the night had suddenly brought down such torrents of water through the hollow or gully where they had taken up their station, that they were in the utmost danger of being swept away before it.

Hawkesworth's Voyages.

2. A house-knife, to cut bread. Yorkshire Gloss. 1697. Still used in the north. Grose and Brockett. Of uncertain etymology.

3. The pluck of a calf. Berkshire. Grose.

Grose confines this word to the northern dialect; Pegge, to that of Kent. It is common in most counties among the vulgar.

He has no gumption; i. e. he sets about the work awkwardly. Pegge.

GUN. n. s. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon. Dr. Johnson. Gun, formerly written gon, is the past participle of the Sax. gynnian, to gape. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, i. 307. Sonner derives it from mangon, Fr. a warlike instrument, used before the invention of guns; an engine, out of which stones, iron, and arrows were violently darted; omitting the first syllable. But why not from gynn, an engine, which Robert of Gloucester uses? This indeed is the most probable etymon. "Sometimes," says Selden, "we put a new signification to an old word; as when we call a piece, a gun; [for] the word gun was in use in England for an engine to cast a thing from a man, long before there was any gunpowder found out." Table-Talk, Lang.

§ 4. Walsingham repeatedly uses gunna for cannon. See also GUNSTONE. The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Kneller, Hist.
The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.

In vain the dart or glittering sword we shun,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaughtering gun.
Granville.

To GUN.* v. n. [from the noun.] To perform the act of shooting with a gun. There is less danger in't than gunning. Bacon, and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

Harvey.
GUSSET.† n. s. [from gousset, Fr.] Any piece sewed on cloth in order to strengthen it. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave, two centuries since, defined the word more nearly to its present meaning, "the piece of a shirt, whereby the armhole is covered." It is an angular piece of cloth sewn at the upper end of the sleeve of a shirt or shift.

GUST.† n. s. [from goust, French; gustus, Latin.]

1. Sense of tasting.

Would he eat to satisfy and not to invite his hunger, and drink to refresh and not to force and oppress himself; his relish would be quick and vigorous, his gust sincere, and his digestion easy. Scott, Christian Life, lib. 3.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter asbes, which th'offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton, P. L.
Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and sought with surly pride. Dryden, Fab.
My sight, and smell, and hearing were cumber'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden, Fab.

3. Leve; liking.

Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.
We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true religion. Tillotson.
The purer the soil is, the purer will all its faculties and operations be, the less it will retain of corporeal gusts and relishes, the more recollected and undivided will be its powers. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 170.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From gust, Goth. and Icelandic.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

See Iul can Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of bear's n. Shakespeare.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps
Sweep down,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining shield. Dryden.

but to make up a Benjamin's mess for some other more gustful. Decay of Piety, p. 119.

GU'STFULNESS. n. s. [from gustful.] The relish of any thing.
As no man can well enjoy himself, or find sound content in any thing, while business or duty lie unfinished on his hands, so when he has done his best toward the dispatch of his work, he will then comfortably take his ease and enjoy his pleasure;
then his food doth taste savourily; then his diver-tisements and recreations have a lively gustfulness;
then his sleep is very sound and pleasant. Burrow, vol. iii. S. 18.

GU'STLESS. adj. [gust and less.] Tasteless; insipid.
No gustless or unsatisfying offal. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 13.

The fishermen save the most part of their fish;
some are gutted, splitted, powdered and dried.
Covey, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.
In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guts were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryden.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

GUTTA SERENA. n. s. [Latin.]
A disease of the eye. See DROPS SERENE.
He hath his eyes open, but sees no otherwise than if a gutta serena, or bested steel, had deprived the optic. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

We know a total obstruction of the optic nerve, which is called gutta serena, makes as perfect a blindness, as an obstruction of the humour aqueus, which is called a cataract. Smith on Opt. p. 98.

GU'TATED. adj. [from gutta, Lat. a drop.]
Besprinkled with drops; bedropped.

GUT. n. s. [from guttur, a throat, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Fr. gouttiere; Norm. Fr. gutier; but the word may have been traced to the Su. Goth.
gutha, to pour forth, to flow. Junius refers gutter to the Cimbr. gautur, a flow of water.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Almon.
Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain. Addison on Italy.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GUTTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors contriv'd to clog the gullies keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by
The divine Desdemona. Shakspeare, Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears.
Sandys.
First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd,
Dryden.

Laughed at his thirst; and, lavish of expense,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence.
Dryden.

To GU'TTLE. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow. A low word.

The foot slip in his porridge, to try if he'd bite: they did not bite, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER. n. s. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.]
In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but figured in hail, which is also a glaciation, and round in its guttulous descent from the air.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

GUTTURAL. adj. [guttural, French;
gutturialis, Latin.] Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.
In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Holder.

Children are occasionally born with guttural swellings. Guttry, Geog. Switzerland.

But there were African as well as Asiatic gymnosophists. The word is also used for any philosopher.

How know you what may be shewed for the gymnosophists prayers in India? Bower of M. Jewel, (1566.) fol. 58. b.

Those seven wise men of Greece, those British druids, Indian, brachmanni, Æthiopian gymnosophists, magi of the Persians.

Burton, Annot. of Med. To the Reader. Thus have most civilities and sciences come, as some think, from the Indian gymnosophists, into Egypt; from thence into Greece; so into Italy; and then over the Alps, into those faint north-west parts of the world.

Blaeu, Figure into the Levant, (1650.) p. 154. Let us straight advance in quest Of this profound gymnosophist. Hudibras, ii. lii.

GYMNOSEPTHEMOUS. adj. [gymnos and septemos.] Having the seeds naked. To GYN v. n. To begin. Wicliffe. See To GIN.

GYNARCHY. n. s. [Gr. gynē, a woman, and archē, government.] Female government; written, not so properly, gunarchy; as some other compounds of this kind are with n instead of y. See GYNOCRACY.

I have always some hopes of change under a gunarchy. Ld. Chesterfield. GYNASTICAN. adj. [gynasticus, genitive of the Gr. gynē, woman.] Relating to women.

Modern physicians prescribe fasting and abstinence to all melancholy lovers; as likewise do all gynastic writers to women.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. (1640.) p. 351. GYNOCRACY. n. s. [old Fr. gynocratie; Gr. gynē, a woman, and cracy, power.] Government over which a woman may preside. Properly written by our old authors gynocracy; less so by modern.

gunocracy. Because undertakes a conjecture of the first cause which excluded gynocracy among them [the French]. Selden on Drayton's Polyol. S. 18. The French exclude gunocracy, or the government in chief by women. Biographicon, p. 76.

GYNOCRACY. n. s. [gynocratie; gynocratie, French.] Petticoat government; femine power. GYPSE. n. s. [Fr. gypse. See GYPSUM.] A kind of stone.

The soil of Cyprus is for the most part rocky; there are in it many entire hills of tale or gypse. Pouchet, Descript. of the East, ii. c. 239.

GYPSEOUS. adj. Relating to gypsum; GYPSINE. adj. belonging to lime or plaster. Gloss. Ang. 1707. We meet with a rhomboidal gypseous stone, called also scinties. Chambers, in V. Gynop. Gypse stone [is] a name given by some writers to the gypsum, or fossil substance, of which the powder, called plaster of Paris, is made by calcination. Chambers.

GYPSUM. n. s. [Latin; Greek, gypsos, from gynē, earth, and gynē, to concoct.] A compound of calcareous earth and vitriolic acid; it forms a distinct species of the calcareous genus of fossils, of which species there are six families. Kirwan. When heated red hot, it falls into powder, which, when mixed with water, is called Plaster of Paris. See also GYPSOUS.

Gypsum is found in very large quantities in many parts of the globe, forming extensive chains of mountains and hills, as in the neighbourhood of Paris. Chambers.

Gypsum — this substance was discovered by Mr. Mayer, a German clergyman of uncommon merit, in the year 1768; it has since been applied with signal success in Germany, Switzerland, France, and America. Kirwan on Minerals, p. 35. GYPSE. See GYPSY.

GYRATION. n. s. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvia attenuated and impelleth the neighbour air, which returning home, in a gyration, carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electric. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyration, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the vibration of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the spectator, until the coal return again to the same place.

GYRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward, Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre, Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard, But rudely met him as he came. Spenser, F. Q.

Does the wild haggard tune fly into the sky, And to the South by thy direction fly? Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious urbs, that roll In restless gyres about the Arctic pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick his spirit in gliding gyres, Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.

To GYRE. v. a. [Latin, gyro.] To turn round.

With the spiteful Philistin, [he the devil] puts out both the eyes of our apprehension and judgment, that he may gyre us about in the mill of unprofitable wickedness. Jp. Holl. Rom. p. 25.

GYRED. † adj. Falling in rings. Dr. Johnson says: citing a passage from Shakespeare's Hamlet, in which the word is gyred. See DOWNGYED.

GYRALCON. n. s. See GENFALCON. GYROMANCY. n. s. [old Fr. gyromantie; from the Gr. gynē, a circle, and mantia, divination.] An ancient sort of divination, performed by walking in or round a circle.

GYVE. † n. s. [gyryn, Welsh. Dr. Johnson confines this word to the plural number; yet it certainly exists, in our language, in the singular.] A fetter; a chain for the legs. It is commonly used in the plural.

The villain march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare.

And knowing this, should I yet stay, Like some who wait away their lives, And never will redress a day, Enamour'd of their golden gyves? B. Jonson.

A golden give, a pleasing wrong. Brown and Pl. Wife for a Month.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Shakspeare.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyres and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton, S. 1.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet A rising rook, that held his fasten'd feet; So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground, His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

To GYVE. † v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

All in Irons was my song, Even now I wate gyve in a payre of stocks. Old Morality of Hycke Scrover.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare more great a fly as Camio, Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thyne own courtship. Shakespeare, Othello.

H† is in English, as in other languages, by a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation; but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural: as right, bought. Dr. Johnson.—The strong emission of the breath, however, is usually withheld from heir, herb, hostler, honest, honour, humour; and perhaps from hospital and hour; and by some from humble.

HA, interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see.

Shakespeare.
Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rome, Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets, ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job, xxxi. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crowd. Dryden.

HA, * n. [from the interjection.] An expression of wonder, surprise, doubt, or hesitation. See the fourth sense of HUM.

Praise her but for this her without-door form,
(Which, on your faith, deserves high speech,) and straight

The shrug, the bum, or ha; — these petty brands,
That calumny doth use: — O, I am out,
That merry does; for calumny will fear
Virtue itself: — these shrugs, these hums, and ha's,

When you have said she's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she's honest.

Shakespeare, Wind. Talc.
You may be any thing, and leave off to make Long-winded exercise; or suck up
Your ha, and hum, in a tune. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

My solemn hums and ha's, the servants quake at. Bacon, and Fl. Lee, Progress.

To HA, * v. n. To express surprise; to hesitate. See To HAW.

HAAK, † n. s. A fish. Another name for the hake. Written haak by Barret and others. See HAKE.

HABEAS CORPUS, † [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowel.

There is no habeas corpus from death.

Sir M. Sandys, Est. (1634.) p. 230.
The very intention of our habeas corpus act, namely, the preservation of the liberties of the subject, absolutely requires that act now to be suspended.

Addition, Frechold, No. 16.

HABERDASHER, † n. s. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minshew from habt ihr dast, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale. Dr. Johnson.—Skinner, who is followed by Junius, offers the Dutch koop, to buy, and dast, foolish, q. d. *koop*er *dast*er, a seller of trifles. Pegge suggests seure d'acier, a needle-maker. But the word belongs to none of these. Berdash is said to have been a name formerly used in England for a certain kind of neck-dress; whence the maker or seller of such clothes was called a berdash; and thence came haberdashers. See Chambers in V. BERDASH.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because such cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, declared his opinion.

HABERDASHERY, * n. s. [from haberdasher.] Articles made or sold by haberdashers.

You will hardly expect me to go through the tape and thread, and all the other small wares of haberdashery and millinery to be gleaned up among our imports. Darke on a Regicide Fence.

HABERDINE, † n. s. [French, haberdaine.] A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.

HABERGEON, † n. s. [Fr. haubergeon, from hauberg; low Lat. haubergetum, haubergium, halsberga. Du Cange and Skinner derive the word from the Teut. haltz, or hals, the neck, and bergen, to cover; others, from al, all, and bergen, to cover. Spelman considers it as the old Fr. haub, high, and berg, covering. Some French etymologists pretend that it comes from haut-ber, a high or distinguished person, one who serves his prince in complete armour. V. Riquetfort in V. HAUBER. But it is no doubt, from hals and bergen, as already stated. Goth. halsberga, a steel collar; Icel. halsberg, the same.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breast-plate; neck-piece; gorget; originally, a coat of mail without sleeves.

It shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon; that it be not rent. Exod. xviii. 32.

And habergeon some, and some a habergeon; So every one in arms was quickly dight. Chaucer.

The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magrino's brass habergeon. Hudibras.

HABILE, * adj. [habilis, Lat. habile, Fr.] Qualified; fit for. Not now in use. See ABLE and HABLE.

God imprinted on her the fairest impress of his most amiable image, and rendered her habile and ready to every good work.

Dr. Walker's Life of Lady Warwick, (1678,) p. 119.

HABILIMENT, n. s. [habillement, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Teaching the Satyr. Spenser, F. Q.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the suns and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABILITATE, v. a. [habilitar, Fr.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

HABILITATE, adj. [habilitar, Fr.] Qualified; entitled.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament; being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITATION, n. s. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon, Ess. 29.

HABILITY, † n. s. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power; means; now ability.

Alidine, though meane born,
And of low livehood and hability. Spenser, F. Q.

Of promptness, and of industry,
Hability, reality. R. Jonson, Masques at Court.

HABIT, † n. s. [habit, old French; habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing; as, habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I alighted
Into a madman's rags; I assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit

Met I my father. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shaks.

Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgement may be made betwixt them. Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden.

Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequently doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakspeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only to merit, but also as to actual infirmity. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose, But faction runs by habit does obey; And wars have that respect for his repose, As winds for balneous when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair person Before Leontes: She shall be habited as it becomes.

The partner of your bed. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustic dances. Dryden.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [habito, Latin.] To inhabit; to dwell in. Not now in use.

Nightingales — That in their sweet songs delight, In thilke places as they haunt. Chaucer, Rom. R. 660.

HABITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitable, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are our selves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time; This is her habitable tropic climate. Dennis.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue. Dryden.

HABITABLENESS. n. s. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. Morc.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the beryl of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HA'BITABLE. n. s. [old Fr. habitable; Lat. habitaculum.] One of our oldest words, being used by Wicliffe and Chaucer; and repeatedly in our old lexicography. The Scotch also use habitable. A dwelling.

He shall finally sleep with me and with him — in the eternal habitude of God.

Bale on the Revet. (1550), P. I.

HA'BITANCE. n. s. [habitat, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art, That here in desert hast thine habitation? And these rich heaps of wealth do't hide apart From the world's eye, and from her right unance. Spenser, F. G.

HA'BITANT. n. s. [habitant, Fr. habitans, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are these bright luminaries Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milton, P. L.

Powers celestial to each other's view Stand still, lest confest, though distant far they lie, Or inhabitants of earth, or son, or sky. Pope.

HABITATION. n. s. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars Numerous, and ev'ry star perhaps a world. Of destin'd habitation. Milton, P. L.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces, For want of habitation and repair, Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocke and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual destruction brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hosier.

God oft descends to visit men Unseen, and through their habitations walks To mark their doings. Milton, P. L.

HABITATOR. n. s. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued into the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer, is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

HABITED. adj. [from habit.] Accustomed; usual.

This ancient and habited vice is amongst the Dutch, of late years, much decreased. Fulker, Holy State, p. 437.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituell, from habit, Fr.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sic, there is power before Once acted, now in body, and to dwell Habitual habitant. Milton, P. L.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time

The scarf is worn away of this committed crime: No speck is left of their habitual stains.

But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become so able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our nature, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HABITUATE. v. a. [habituere, French.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot.

HABITUATE. adj. [from the verb.] Inveterate; obstinate.

All earthly vanities, which any habituate sinners deride. Hammond, Works, iv. 679.

HA'BITUDE. n. s. [habitud, Lat. habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a straight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either deviating this rule, or holding conformably to it, occasion several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South, Sermon.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life The friend, the mistress, and the wife; Variety we must pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts, Was such dead authors could not give; But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use.

This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds, And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds Of just observe, and vulgar rivalry, The ill-learn'd question, and the fond reply, Brought by long habitude from head to nerve; Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to give an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BLE. adj. [habile, old Fr. habil, bas Bret. as our own word was formerly written; habilis, Lat.] Fit; proper. See ABLE.

As haggard hawk, presuming to contend With hardly fow above his hawk's might. Spenser, F. G. l. xi. 19.

HA'BLE. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as we would noid, or we would; will noid, or we would, that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

Philautus determined, habesh, to send his letters. Lilly, Euphues, &c. p. 109.

As they came in by habesh, so will I bring them in a reckoning at six and at seven.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the West, (1631.)

He circles darts and squares, With cyphers, astral characters; Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em, Although set down habesh at random. Hudibras.

haft, Gothick; from To have or hold.]
A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

But yet so fond I sought the heft,

Which might unto the blade accorde.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

This brandish'd dagger

I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast.

Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden, Duressy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts, Logic.

TO HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft. Ainsworth.

HA'FTER.* n. s. A wrangler; a caviller.
Barret's Aliv. 1590. Serenius renders this old word, in his Swedish dictionary, a crafty or cunning fellow, 1757. It is not now in use.

HAG.* n. s. [hægete, Sax. a goblin;
æckie, Dutch, a witch; hæge, German;
formerly hæge, meaning a wise woman,
from the Runic hæge, wisdom, knowledge. V. Keyser, Antiq. Sept. p. 149.
Our word at first was hæg. V. Hulcot and Barret.]

1. A witch; an enchantress.

The very dregs of miracles, in milkpans and gossy diabs, by Robingoodfellow, and hæges, and fairies, all wrought somewhat for their idle superstitions.

Deering on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576.) ch. 9.
Out of my door, you witch! you hæg, you hægge, you polceit, you runion. Shakespeare.

2. A fury; a she monster.

Thuspoke th'impatient prince, and made a pause;
His foul hæges raised their heads, and clapt their hands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause, Flourish'd their makes, and tost their flaming brands. Crashaw.

3. An old ugly woman.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hæges,
With hoary locks all loose, and visage grim.

Spenser, F. Q.

Such affections may become the young;
But thou, old hæg, of threecore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee! Dryd.

4. Appearances of light and fire upon the manes of horses, or men's hair, were formerly called hæges. They are now known to be electrical phenomena.

Hæges are said to be made of sweat or some other vapour issuing out of the head; a not unusual error among us when we ride by night in summer time. Blount, Gloss.

HA'D-BORN.* adj. [hæg and born.] Born of a witch or hæg.

The son which she did litter here,
A frocked whelp, hæg-born. Shakespeare, Tempest.

TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,

And hæg themselves with apparitions. Hudibras.

How are superstitious men hægged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions!

L'Estrange.

TO HAG.* v. a. To cut down. Craven
Dialect. A corruption of hack.

HA'GABAG.* See HUCKABACK.

HA'GGARD.* adj. [haggard, Fr. wild;
and accordingly some derive it from the
Lat. agrestis; others, from the Germ.
hag, an inclosure, a fortified place;
whence, according to M. Huet, a haggard was applied to a person proud and confident, on account of the strength of the place in which he was.]

1. Wild; untamed; difficult to be reclaimed.

As haggard hawk, presuming to contend

With wary fowl, above his lairle might,

His weary pounces all in rain doth spend,

To truss the prey too heavy for his might. Spenser, F. Q.

She's too disdainful;

I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As haggard as the rock. Shakespeare.

Virtus stethes over the names of her servants,
howe'er over them with her wings, as gerards from the kites and buzzards of this haggard
age. Stafford's Noble, P. ii. p. 78.

In time, all haggard hawks will come to lure.
Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

2. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful beides of what in fight had pass'd,

His hands and haggard eyes to heav'n he cast.

Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast haggard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd? Smith.

HA'GGARD. n. s.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow.

Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly? Shakespeare.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the serien, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Wotton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,

In a dark grove, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Gord.

HA'GGARD.* n. s. [Sax. hæg and geap;
Su. Goth. hæg, a small piece of ground adjoining to a house. See the third sense of Haw. Dr. Jamieson notices haggard, which he understood to be used in some parts of Scotland, but of which he gives no example; and he considers it as imported from Ireland, where it is in common use. It was in the English language, I may add, nearly two centuries since.] A stack-yard.

When the barn was full, any one might thrust in the haggard. Howell, Lett. ii. 24. (ed. 1632.)

The remainder of the powder was committed to a vault in the haggard under the corn-stead.

Ep. of Kiln's Narrative, p. 49.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] De-formedly; uglyly.

For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum; }
And precious odors from distant Indies come; }
How haggardly see'st thou she looks at day. Dryden, Juv.

HA'GGED.* adj. [from hæg; or from the German hager.] Lean; ugly; like a hæg. Dr. Johnson has placed the following example under haggard, and says that haggard should have been written haggard. But a passage in Gray's poetry, with a note by Mason, distinguishes the words, as one of those gentlemen who have made additions to Johnson has observed; and therefore I have now introduced into the dictionary this adjective.

A haggard carrion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon his back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.

The ghostly prudes with haggard face
Already had condemn'd the sinner. Gray's Long Story.

HA'GGERS.* n. s. [from hæg or hack. Dr.
Johnson. — No doubt from hack, that is,
to chop; which in Scotland is hæg; Su.
Goth. Hæga.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from hæg.] Of the nature of a hæg; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on.

And wore us out of act. Shakespeare.

TO HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hæg.] To cut; to chop; to mangle; always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er

Come to him where in gore he lay insepar'd. Shakespeare.

TO HA'GGLE.* v. n. [harcelier, French, bar-guigner. Cotgrave. "To hagggle, hucke, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity."] To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

Phoo! how she stands, biting her nails,

As if she play'd for half her nails,

Sorting her cards, haggling, and picking! Shenstone.

I never could drive a hard bargain in my life, concerning any matter whatever; and least of all do I know how to hagggle and buckster with merit.

Burke.

HA'GGLER.* n. s. [from hagggle.]
1. One that cuts.

2. One that is tardy in bargaining; a paltering haggler. [gaguerall.] Cotgrave.

HAGHER, or HAGURS.* n. s. pl. [Teut. hægh.] Hairs. Grose, and Craven
Dial. A northern word.

HAGIOGRAPH.* n. s. pl. [Latin;
from hæge, holy, and graphein, to write, Gr.]
Holy writings; a name given to part of the books of Scripture. See HAGIO-
GRAPHICAL.

Eight (of the translators of the Bible,) assembled at Cambridge, were to finish the rest of the historical books, and the hagiographs.

Alp. Newcome, On the Transl. of the Bib. p. 43.

HAGIOGRAPHAL. * adj. [from hagio-grapha.] Denoting the writings called hagiographa.

Strabus—writing upon St. Jerome's prologues, there placed before the Old Testament, wherein, according to the copies then in use, the book of Tobit is said to be separated from the Divine Scriptures and numbered among the hagiographa; he findeth fault with the transcribers, and says, that Tobit is to be set among the apocryphal books, and not among the hagiographa, properly so called: whereof there but is nine, the whole number of the canonical books being no more than XXII in all.

Rp. Coptic Canon of Scripture, p. 152.

HAGIOGRAPHER. † n. s. [ἅγιος and γράφω.] A holy writer. The Jews divide the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

They were hagiographers, who are supposed to be left to the use of their own words.

Whaley, Gen. Prof. N. Test.

HAGSHIP. * n. s. [from hag.] The title of a witch or hag; the state of a hag.

What's this? oh, 'tis the charm her hagship gave me.

Milford's Witch.

HAGUE, or HA'GUEBUT. * n. s. [old Fr. hacquebute.] A kind of fire-arm formerly used; a hand-gun of about three quarters of a yard in length, according to Bullock; a culverin, or hand-cannon, fixed on a little carriage, since called the arquebuse with a hook, according to Grose.

HAII. interj. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just, She stamps, and then cries hai! as 'twere must.

Dryden.

HAIL. † n. s. [Sax. hælg, hælgol.] This word is rarely found in the plural.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling.

Locke.

With strange rains, hails, and showers, were they persecuted.

Wisd. xvi. 16.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend the Egyptian sky.

Milton, P. L.

To HAIL. v. n. [hælgian, Sax.] To pour down hail.

My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the forest.

Is. xxxii. 19.

To HAIL. * v. a. [Su. Goth. haila; Iceland. ihella.] To pour.

For, ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye,
He hail'd down oaths, that he was only mine.

Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dr.

HAIL. interj. [hail, health, Saxon; hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὑγιαίνω of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry: health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!

Say to the king the knowledge of the truth.

Shakespeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds;
It does not look as if it would have a hail

Or fresh winds'd in it, as on other morn.

B. Jonson.

The angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Md. P. L.

Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail, horrors! hail,
Infernal world! and thou, profoundest hell,
Receive thy new possessor! Milton, P. L.
All hail, be cry'd, thy country's grace and love,
Once first of men below, now first of birds above.
Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take. Rome.

HAIL. * adj. Healthy; sound. See HALE.
HAIL-YELLOW. * n. s. [hail and yellow.] A companion.

No man, that erst hail-fellow was with best,
Worse on to weenie himself a god at best.

Rp. Hail, Sat. iii. 1.

All these agree with him in blindness and darkness; yes, they are all hail-fellow well met!

Junius, Sin Stigmat. p. 411.

I thought all people here had been hail-fellow well met.
L. Edwards, Tr. of Quercus, p. 46.
The master and servant are at hail-fellow, the gentleman and the clown are upon the square with one another.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. 1.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hail'd by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen.

Knots.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice best your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

HAILSHOT. * n. s. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. Hayward.

HAILSTONE. † n. s. [hail and stone; hælgol-stæn, Sax.] A particle or single ball of hail.

They were more which died with hailstones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

Isaiah, x. 21.

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakespeare.

Hard hailstones lye not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.

HAILY. † adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail; full of hail.

From whence dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily showers. Pope.

HAINOUS. * See HEINOUS.

HAIR. * n. s. [hæp, Sax.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare.
Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a dril? Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shaks. K. Lear.
Much is breeding;
Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou dost. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
He judges to a hair of little intricacies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Course; or order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

HAIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written hairbrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrained slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

HAIRBREADTH. * n. s. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-hand could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss. Julius, 11. 16.

I spoke of most disastrous chances;
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shakespeare.

HAIRBEL. * n. s. The name of a flower; the hyacinth. See HAREBELL.

HAIRCLOTH. * n. s. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth. Grew, Museum.

HAIRRED. * adj. Having hair. Thus we say, a red-haired man.

A beast, hair like a bear.

Purchas's Pilgrimage, (1617.) p. 708.

HAIRHUNG. * adj. [hair and hung.] Hanging by a hair.

Man, whose fate,
Fate irreverently, entire, extreme,
Endless, hair-hung, breech-shaken, o'er the gulf
A moment trembles. Young, Night Th. 2.

HAIRINESS. † n. s. [from hair.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

To discover the inequalities, rubs, and hairiness of the skin. Brown, Chr. Mar. ii. 9.

HAIRLACE. * n. s. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia. Harvey.

If haily happens to be carious,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
She gets a cold as sure as death. Swift.

HAIRLESS. † adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

White beads have arm'd their thin and hairless scalp Against thy majesty. Shakespeare.

To see an old steeple lase! perched high,
Crouching beneath a golden canopy;
The whiles a thousand hairless crows crouch low
To kiss the precious case of his proud toe.
Sp. Hall, Sat. iv. 7.

HAIRNEEDLE, or HAIRPIN. n. s. Formerly an instrument for torturing the hair; the latter, within our own memory; the former, very ancient. Sax. hap-neale, calamistrum, i. e. an iron to curl the hair. See TO CALAMISTRATE. The modern hairpin kept the hair in certain fanciful shapes, by being stuck through the plaster of powder and pomatum most plentifully bestowed upon it.

HAIRY. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.

She has hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of flowers. Shakespeare.
Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more permeable. Bacon.

2. Consisting of hair.

Storms have shed
From vines the hairy bonours of their head. Dryden.

HAKE. n. s. A kind of fish.

The coast is stored with mackerel and hake. Carron.

TO HAKE. v. n. To sneak or loiter; to go about idly. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

HA'KOT. n. s. [from hake.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HAL, in local names, is derived like al from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothic hal signifies a temple, or any other famous building.

Gibson's Camden.
HALBERD. n. s. [halebarde, French; halebarde, Dutch, from barde, an axe, and hale, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast. Shakespeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Four knives in garbs succinate, a trusty bond,
Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.

HALBERDIER. n. s. [halebardier, Fr. from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.

The duchess appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person. Bacon.

Captain, for so I guess thee by thy arms
And the loose fanks of halberdiers about thee.

Bacon, and Fl. Nob. Guelphens.
The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than used to go with him. Clarendon.

HALCYON. n. s. [halcyo, Lat. from the Gr. άλκυον, from άλ, the sea, and κυον, to bring forth.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these—such ev'ry passion—
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a winter sea. Dryden.

HALCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempests come,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Dehoun.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the son in the equinoctial circle. Bentley.

HALCYONIAN. n. s. adj. [from halcyon. Fr. alcyonien.] Peaceful; quiet; still.

These our halcyonian times of peace and prosperity.

Sheldon, Mirac. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 179.
These peaceful and halcyonian days, which the Church enjoyed for many years.

Macle on Churches, p. 59.
Days of clouds and thick darkness, very distant from those white, halcyonian, serene, and peaceable days. Worthington on the Millennium, p. 27.

HALE. n. s. [Sax. hal, health, safety.] Welfare. Chaucer writes it hele.

Elfbones, all heedless of his dearest hale,
Flew greedily into the herd he thrust. Spenser, Astrophel.

HALE. adj. [This should rather be written half, from hal, health. Dr. Johnson.—Hammond wrote it half or halie, in the sense of whole, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. The Gothic adjective for sound, is hails; Sax. hal.]

1. Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.

My scaly sleep like well below,
They need not melancholy
For they were hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wise pariahs concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be captured, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he's quite another thing:
I wish he may hold out till spring. Swift.

2. Whole; uninjured. [Dutch, heel; Su. Goth. hal; Sax. hal.]

When, on the other side, sin, after the combat
Of God's rod, comes off unvanquished and hale, &c.
Hannemann, Works, iv. 586.

TO HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakespeare, Coriol.

My third comfort,
Start'd most unlikeli, is from my breast
Had'd out to murder. Shakespeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Luke.

He by the neck hath half, in pieces cut,
And met me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.
Neither by harpy-footed furies half'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought. Milton.

This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subsideeth, and *hale*th the heart unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be *hale*d to it when he had no mind? Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people provided sometimes to pull and hale one another, yet no blood was drawn till the time of the Grecohi. Swift.

HALE. v. n. s. Pull; violence in dragging. Usually written, and pronounced, haul. See HAUL.

HAL'ER. n. s. [from hale.] One who pulls and hales.

HALF. n. s. plural halves. [half, Sax. and all the Teutonic dialects; from hal. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; or an equal part.

An half acre of land. 1 Sam. xlv. 14.
Many might go to heaven with half the labour they go to hell, if they would venture their industry the right way. B. Jensen.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble
Of virtues, all our joys makes double,
And into labours divides our trouble. Dehoun.

Or what but riches is there known
Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell,
For none but hands divine could work so well. Dryden.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian.

Addition on Italy.
Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her leniency, in thy softer half,
Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.
Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbutnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

3. In the plural, a popular exclamation, a kind of interjection, on seeing another pick up any thing which he has found, and which entitles the person who makes it to half of the value of it. See HALVES. Brand.

And who sees you stoop to thy ground,
Cries, haler! to every thing you've found.
Dr. Savage, Horace to Scorn, (1730,) p. 25.

HALF. adv.

HALF-READ.* adj. [half and read.] Superficially skilled by reading.

The clown unread, and half-read gentleman.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. s. One imperfectly learned.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons.

Watts.

HALF-SEAS over. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas over to death:

And since I must die once, I would be lark To make a double work of what's half-finish'd.

Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED.* adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and drift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted.

Bacon.

HALF-SPHERE. n. s. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots; and day, At shewing but thy head forth, start away From this half-sphere.

J. Jonan.

HALF-STARVED.* adj. [half and starved.] Almost starved.

Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd.

Milton, P. L.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet, But mungrel-mischievous; for my blood boil'd To view this brutal act.

Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. s. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together.

Shakespeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless be seen, who is with virtue crown'd, The tempest rages, and bears the thunder sound; Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:

Merely as he liv'd resigns his breath; Meets deadly half-way, nor shrinks at death.

Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. s. [half and wit.] A block-head; a foolish fellow.

Half wits are few, so little and so light, We scarce could know they live, but that they bite.

Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgement of the women than of half-witted poets.

Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surprised to find him in such a ragged

Arbutnot, Hist. of Joan Bull.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt.

To HALF.* v. a. To divide into two parts. See TO HALVE.

Our Nicholas, for I account him at least half a saint, tells me that you have good means to know when — will be in town.

Watson, Lett. (1638). Rem. p. 374.

HALF'EN.* adj. [from half.] Wanting half its due qualities.

So perfect in that art was Paridell, That he Malbroce's half-en eye did wile, His half-en eye he wiled wondrous well.

Spenser, F. Q. lib. 3. s. 5.

HALF'ENDEAL.† adv. [not a substantive, as Dr. Johnson asserts.] Chaucer, half-endeal; Teut. half-deel.] Nearly half.

Now the humid night was farforth spent, And heavenly lamps were half-deadly spent.

Spenser, F. Q.

HALF'ER.* n. s. [from half.] 1. One who possesses only half of any thing.

It would be more pleasing unto God, and commendable with men, if yourselves and such halfers in opinion, "omnium horum hominum" for your private ends, would openly show what covertly you conceal. Montaigne, ap. Cic. p. 149.

2. This word does not occur in the dictionaries; but it means a male fallow-deer gelded, which is so called upon a stone footing as a stone-horn in French is called cheval-entier.—Many, through ignorance of the etymon, [half] will call it havior, which is very absurd, and puts me in mind of a worthy gentleman, who told me he once wanted to send half of one of these cut bucks as a present, but when he came to write about it, could not spell the proper term, and could get no information about it; and as he did not care to give it wrong, he at last omitted sending it.

Pegge, Anonym. iv. 42.

HAL'LIARDE. See HALLIARDS.

HAL'LIART.* n. s. A sort of fish. Aluac.

In the afternoon, having three hours calm, our people caught upwards of a hundred halibuts, some of which weighed a hundred pounds, and none less than twenty pounds.

Cook and King's Voyage.

HAL'IDOM.† n. s. [halix bom, holy judgement, or halix, and dame, for lady. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson accordingly gives the example from Spenser, with the definition of the word as meaning "our blessed lady," and with a remark that it should be halidam. But halidom appears to have been an ancient oath or solemn affirmation, "par le sacrement," as Sherrwood observes; "sacrement de jurement ancienne." The Sax. haligdom denoted holiness, devoutness, integrity, as well as a sacrament or any thing holy. Halidame, or halidom, as Dr. Johnson would have it for the holy virgin, is a corruption of the original word; but Spenser is not guilty of it.] An adjuration by what is holy.

By any halidome, quoth he, Ye a great master are in your degree.

Spenser, Habb. Tale.

By my hollow, I was fast asleep.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Fer.

HAL'IMASST. n. s. [halix and mass.] The feast of All-souls. See HOLLOWMAS.
HAL'ING. n. s. [from To hale.] An act of dragging by force; compulsion.

The beggarly help of halings and amercements.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

HAL'ITUDUS. adj. [halitus, Lat.] Vaporous; fumes.

We speak of the atmosphere as of a peculiar thin, and halutious liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine.

Dryde.

HALL. n. s. [Goth. hall; Sax. hal; Dutch, halle; old Fr. halle; low Lat. hala; Lat. aula; Gr. αἰὴλ.] From the Sax. verb helan, to cover; hall a covered building, according to Mr. H. Tooke.

1. A court of justice; as, Westminster Hall.

O lost too soon in yonder house or hall. Pope.

2. A manor-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate.

Addison.

3. The public room of a corporation.

With expedition on the bench call,

To summon all the company to the hall. Garth.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall.

Shakespeare.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls

And courts of princes. Milton, Comus.

5. A collegiate body in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge; in the former, not having the same constitution and endowment as a college; in the latter, exactly the same.

No master or head of any college or hall, in either of the said universities, shall, on any occasion whatsoever, be absent from his college, or hall, above two months together.

Dean Prideaux, Life, Ac. p. 223.

HALLELUJAH. n. s. [הללויה, Hallelu Praise ye the Lord. "To demonstrate that God is the proper object of praise, these words, Praise ye the Lord, are so compounded together, as they make but one word in Hebrew, hallelujah."] See Leigh's Critica Sacra, p. 57. In our church, as Wheatley observes, we repeat the sense of it every day in English; and in the first Liturgy of king Edward VI. the word itself was retained.] A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saluts —

Ungracious hallicujahs to Thee sing.

Hymns of high praise. Milton, P. L.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallicujahs of the celestial choir.

Dryde.

HALLELUJAH. n. s. [from hallelujah.] Denoting a song of thanksgiving.

They mean one of those psalms which were called hallicujah psalms, because they had the word hallicujah prefixed to them.

Christian Antiq. li. 119.

HAL'LIARDS or HAL'YARDS. n. s. pl. In naval language, ropes or tackle employed to hoist or lower a sail.

The haliards of the fore-sail. Sherrwood.

VOL. II.

HALL'O'Y. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from halter, to draw. Dr. Johnson. — It is much more probably from the Sax. halpan, to follow, to make a great noise; whence loud, and to low; Germ. hellen. Yet I remember somewhere to have seen a loup, to the wolf! proposed as the origin; and Cotgrave gives us harlow, which he explains by "hare-loup, a word wherewith dogs, that hunt or assail a wolf, are cheered and encouraged." See, however, ALEW. The interjection has the accent always on the last syllable; the verb indifferently on either.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,

More noisy than the rest, but crive halloo, And, in a trice, the bellowing herd comes out.

Dryden.

HAL'LOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tunable

Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn.

Shakespeare.

2. To treat as in contempt.

Country folks hallooed and shouted after me, as the errant coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy.

Sidney.

HAL'LOW. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,

Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,

Though gout and age his speed detain,

Old John *halloo*s his bounds again. Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Marius,

Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him, Halloo the other. Shaks. K. Lear.

HAL'LOOING. n. s. [from halloo.] A loud and vehement cry.

There are noises, huntings, shoutings, hallooings,

Amidst the brakes and furzes. Shakespeare, Magn. Lovell.

HAL'LOW. v. a. [haltsan, halg, Sax. hal.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or halloo churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of public resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

Hosier.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloo the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn.

Hosier.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor? Shakespeare, Henry VI.

Sword, I will halloo thee for this thy deed.

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.

Shakespeare.

My prayers

Are not words duly halloo'd, nor my wishes

More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes

are all I can return. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

God from work

Now resting, bless'd and halloo'd the seventh day,

As resting on that day from all his works,

But rest in silence holy kept. Milton, P. L.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,

And vestal fires in halloo'd temples burn. Dryde.

No satyr lurks within this halloo'd ground; But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Greenville.

2. To reverence as holy; hallooed be thy name.

HAL'LOWMAS. n. s. [Sax. halig and mass.] The feast of All-souls: one of the cross quarters of the year, computing from the first of November to Candlemas.

She came adorned hither like sweet May, Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

To speak pulling like a beggar at halloomas.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Fer.

HAL'LOCINATE. v. n. [Lat. hallucinatus.] To stumble; to blunder.

Cochran.

HAL'LOCINATION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Lat.] Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but unquestionably a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the scribbler, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM. n. s. [henim, Saxon.] Straw; pronounced harm: which see.

HAL'OT. n. s. [Fr. halo, from the Greek ἅλως, a circle.] A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the ball be a little stalled, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the halostones are duly figured, may be coloured.

Newton.

I saw by reflection, in a vessel of saffron-water, three halos, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentric to his body. Newton.

HAL'OW, or HE'LOW. adj. [Sax. hryl, bashful.] Shy; awkward, bashful.

A northern word. Grose, and Wilbraham's

Cheshire Gloss.

HALSE. n. s. [Sax. halp.] The neck; the throat; one of our oldest words, and yet retained in the north of England, where it is pronounced hause. Halse is likewise in our old lexicography.

Thy little children hanging by the hals,

For thy Jason, that was of love so false. Chaucer, Man of Law's Pro.

TO HALSE. v. a. [German, halsen; Su. Goth. halsan; to embrace: from half, the neck.]

1. To embrace about the neck, as children do their parents. Hulot.

Each other kissed glad.

And lovely halsed, from fears of treason free,

And plighted hands, for ever friends to be. Spenner, F. Q. iv. iii. 49.

2. To adjure. [Sax. halpan. Mr. Tyrwhitt has mistaken the sense in the following passage, where he rejects the obvious Saxon meaning, and indeed condescends not to notice it, conceiving the word as denoting to salute with reverence. But that is another sense.]

This young child to conjure he began,

And said, O dore child, I halse thee

In virtue of the holy Trinitie,

Tell me what is a bigger sin to sing,

Sith that thy thete is cut to my setting. Chaucer, Priores's Tale.

5. To greet; to salute with respect or reverence. [Germ. heilisan, from heil; Sax. hal; Goth. hails. See the interjection HAIL.]

The eleven sterres haild him all.

Via, of P. Ploughman, (1550) fol. 2. a. 11.
I haild hym lewdlich, as I hys freode were.

Via, of P. Ploughman, fol. xii.

HA'LSINGING.† adj. [Sax. halp, the throat.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This ill halsinging horry name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many.

Carver.

HAL'SER. n. s. [from halp, neck, and seel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow base
They hoisted, and with well-wreathed halsers hoise
Their white sails. Chapman.

No halsers need to bind these vessels here,
Nor boarded anchors; for no storms they fear.
Dryden.

To HALT.† v. n. [healt, Sax. lame; healtan, to limp; halts, Goth. halt, Icel. lame, from halld, to keep back, to detain, Serenius. In like manner, Mr. H. Tooke says that halt is the imperative of the Sax. verb healtan, to hold. Div. Purl. ii. 477. The Germ. halten, and Dan. halt, are also to stop.]

1. To limp; to be lame.
And will she yet debate her eyes
On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus?

Shakespeare.

Thus inborn broils the fictions would engage,
Or wars of evil'd heirs, or foreign rage,
Till *halt*ing vengeance o'ertook our age. Dryd.
Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.

Pope.

2. To stop in a march.
I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march.

Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.
How long halt ye between two opinions?

1 Kings, xviii. 21.

4. To fail; to falter.
Here's a paper written in his hand;
A *halt*ing sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shakespeare.
All my familiars watch'd for my *halt*ing, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jerem. lx. 10.

HALT.† adj. [Goth. halts; Sax. healt. See the verb.] Lame; crippled.
Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind, St. Luke, xiv. 21.

HALT. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. A stop in a march.
The heavenly bands
Down from a sky of Jasper lighted now
In Paradise, soon on a hill made halt.

Milton, P. L.

Scouts each coast light armed scour,
Each quarter, to decry the distant foe,
Where halt'd, or whether halt, or if for fight
In motion, or in halt. Milton, P. L.
Without any halt they march'd between the two armies. Clarendon.
He might have made a halt till his foot and artillery came up to him. Clarendon.

HA'LT'ER.† n. s. [from halt.]
1. One who limps. Sherwood,

2. One who hesitates.

Those halters between two religions think they can do their homage to the true God and to the false. Siden on the Prophecy, (1659), p. 412.

HA'LT'ER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has given healtpe as the origin of halter, which,
in order to make it pass, he has derived from halp, the neck. The true Sax.
word is halp, or halp; Serenius and I have derived it from the Su. Goth. halda, or haella, to hold.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.
He's a halt, my lord, and all his pow'r's do yield;
And lumbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

Shakespeare.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded;
wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Heyward.

Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disengaged halters, as a juggler's throat
Doth rhaude. Clarendon.

He gets renown, when, to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear.
Dryden, Jun.

2. A cord; a strong string.
Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge.

Sandys.

To HA'LT'ER.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.
Some that are tall, and some that are dwarf,
Some that are halt'd, and some that wear warfs.

B. Jonson, Masques.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Atterbury.

HA'LT'INGLY.† adv. [from halt.] In a slow manner.

We must wait for the truth which comes halt- ingly behind. Dict. of Quotations.

To HALVE.† v. a. [from half, halves.] To divide into two parts. See TO HALP.
Then, says he, the moon has strength enough;
and is not yet halved.

Shaksp, Twelfth, p. 66.

HALVES. interj. [from half, halves being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb?
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first.

Clarendon.

HAM, whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon pam, a house, farm, or village. Gibson's Camden.

HAM. n. s. [ham, Sax. hamme, Dutch.]
1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining. Wicam.

2. The thigh of a hog salted.
Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham pye
Are no rewards for want and infancy? Pope.

HA'NACK.† See HAMMOCK.

HA'MADRYAD.† n. s. [Greek, ἡμάδρυς, together, and δρῦς, an oak; Fr. hamadryade.]
One of those wood-nymphs of antiquity, who were feigned to live and die with the trees to which they were attached.

The common opinion concerning the nymphs, whom the ancients called hamadryades, is more to the honour of trees than any thing yet mentioned:
It was thought that the fate of these nymphs had no near a dependance on some trees, more especially oaks, that they lived and died together.

Spectator, No. 589.

The hamadryad or nymph, who must necessarily have perished with the tree, appeared to him
the next day. Ibid.

HA'MATE.† adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Entangled; twisted together.

To explain cohesion by hamate atoms is accounted "ignotum per ignotum."

Hy. Berkeley, Seris, § 297.

HA'MATED. adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Hooked;
set with hooks.

To HA'MBLE.† v. a. [Sax. hamelan; Chaucer writes the word hamel; Dan. ham-ble.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME. n. s. [hama, Sax.] The collar by which a horse draws in a waggon.

HAME.† n. s. [Sax. ham.] Home. Our old word; and yet used in the north of England.

Therefore is I come, and eke Alein,
To grind our corn, and carry it home again.

Chaucer, Rice's Tale.

To HA'MEL.† See TO HAMBLE. Hamlin, or hamlin, is used for working lame,
in the Craven dialect.

HA'MLET. n. s. [ham, Sax. and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon.

He pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, so, when the day return'd,
The country wast'd and the hamlets burn'd.

Dryden.

HA'MLETED.† adj. [from hamlet.] Countrified; accustomed only to a hamlet.

He is properly and justly to be counted alone that is illiterate, and unactively lives hamleted
in some untravell'd village of the stultier country.

Editham, Rec. ii. 49.

HAMMER. n. s. [hanep, Sax. hammer,
Danish.]

1. The instrument, consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare.
The staff will cut work well with a hammer.

Bacon.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke.

Dryden, Jun.

2. Any thing destructive.
That renowned pillar of truth, and hammer of heresies, St. Augustine. Hobbes on Providence.

To HAMMER.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To beat with a hammer.

His bores the hammer'd steel to strength surpas.
Sandys.

This christal bore,
That shines so clear,
And carries in its womb a little day,
Once hammer'd will appear
Inpure as dust, as dark as clay.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646), p. 57.

2. To forge or form with a hammer.
Unless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass.

Milton, S. C.

Some hammer helmets for the fighting field.

Dryden.

Drudg'd like a smith, and on the anvil beat,
 Till he had hammer'd out a rare estate. Dryden.
 I must pay with hammer'd money instead of milled. Dryden.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour: used commonly in contempt.

What thou still be hammering treachery,
 To humble down thy husband and thyself?

He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witscraft, and picture it accordingly. Clarendon.

Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles. Heyward.

By this time Mr. Pryn's malice had hammer'd out something.

Aph. Ludb., Hist. of his Trial, ch. 30.

To HAMMER, v. n.

1. To work; to be busy; in contempt.
 Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
 Whence this month I have been hammering. Shakespeare.

I have been studying how to compare
 This prison where I live unto the world;
 And, for because the world is populous,
 And here is not a creature but myself,
 I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer out it. Shakespeare.

2. To be in agitation.
 Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
 Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Shakespeare.

HAMMERABLE.* adj. [from hammer]. Capable of being formed by a hammer.

Sherwood.

HAMMERCLOTH.* n.s. [hammer and cloth]. The cloth that covers a coach-box. The coachman formerly used to carry a hammer, pincers, a few nails, &c. in a leather pouch belonging to his box; and this cloth was used for the hiding or concealing of them from the publick view. Pegge.

HAMMERER.* n.s. [from hammer]. One who works with a hammer. Sherwood.

HAMMERHARD. n.s. [hammer and hard]. Hammerhard is when you harden iron or steel with much hammering on it. Mozon.

HAMMERMAN.* n.s. [hammer and man]. One who beats with a hammer at the forge.

Hard-handed and stiff ignorance, worthy a trowel or a hammerman. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

HAMMERWORT.* n.s. [Sax. hampr-wort]. An herb. [parietaria]. See Wort.

HAMMOCK.* n.s. [hama and hack, Sax. Dr. Johnson].—The word is Indian, amack; and our old writers follow it. Temple, from whom alone Dr. Johnson cites an example, gives it hammock. A swinging bed.

Cotton for the making of hammocks, which are Indian beds.

Raleigh, Discov. of Guiana, (1596), p. 32.
 The Brazilians call their beds hammocks; they are as a sheet laid at both ends; and so they sit rocking themselves in them.

See R. Hakluyt, Observe. Voy. to the S. Sea, p. 27.
 The storm being over, they [sailors] commonly get into hammocks or hammacks.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

Temple.

HAMPER.* n.s. [supposed by Minshew to be contracted from hand panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper, Dr. Johnson.—The word may be traced to the Sax. hnap, a cup; old Fr. hanap; Armor. anap; whence hanaperium, either a large cup, or a place in which to deposit cups, a cupboard. V. Du Cange in HANAPERIUM. Hence its application to a trunk, or box, in which any thing might be kept; and so hanaper, perhaps, for a treasury. Or it may be referred to the old word ambry, a cupboard; from almonry, or the place where alms were kept in order to be distributed. See AMBERY. Certain it is, that our word was formerly amper; though Dr. Johnson cites only the modern usage of it by Swift.] Formerly, a cupboard; a chest; a box; now, a large basket for carriage.

Either as a spiritual food and victual in their tabernacles, ampers, lutes; or as a mystic in their locked closets.

Sheldon, Miscr. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 255.
 The Greek word, used by the translators, doth properly signify a hatch, or canopy to put victuals in, or a chest to lock treasure in.

 What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!
 What hampers full of bleeding hearts! Swift.

To HAMPER.* v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes, that hamplins in Teutonick is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hampur, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius gives a much more probable original, viz. "hampr, Icel. funiculus grossus lineus: Sueh. Vulg. hampas med negoti, re difficili intricatus laborare."]

1. To shackle; to entangle, as in chains or nets.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
 That my free soul may use her wing.
 Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
 As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing. Herbert.

We shall find such engines to assail,
 And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force. Milton, S. A.

What was it but a lion hamper'd in a net? J. Evelyn.

Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
 And mother wits before their gallants;
 Until they're hamper'd in the noose,
 Too fast to dream of breaking loose. Hudibras.

Heaven's youngest-term'd star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car
Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Love led them on; and faith, who knew them best
Thy handmaids, clad them o'er with purple beams
And aure wings, that up they flew so drest,
And spoke the truth of thee on glorious thrones
Before the judge. Milton, Sonnet.

Those of my family their master slight,
Grown despicable in my handmaid's sight. Sunday.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, Art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings great;
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

Since he had placed his heart upon wisdom,
Health, wealth, victory and honour should always wait on her as her handmaids. Addison.

Thou criticism the muse's handmaid! pray,
To dress her charms, and make her more below'd. Page.

New purple hangings clothe the palace walls.
And sumptuous festings are made in spacious halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorance, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross hanging;
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakespeare.

3. Death by a halter.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage,
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page. Pope.

4. Display; exhibition.

This untidy mole mislaid several coxcombs;
and, like the hanging out of false colours, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party. Addison.

HA'NGING. participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakespeare.
What Ethiop's lips he has!

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!
Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter;
a hanging matter.

HA'NGING-SLEEVES. * n. s. pl. Strips of the same stuff with the gown, hanging down the back from the shoulders;
formerly worn by children of both sexes.
See the second sense of the neuter verb hang.

These mistakes are to be left off with your hanging-sleeves. Ld. Halifax.

HA'NGMAN. * n. s. [hang and man.]

1. The public executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gulleys; in his right hand he was pointed holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Singden.

Who stukes that noise there? who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakespeare.

Men do not stand

In so ill case, that God hath with his hand Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critic, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;
As they had seen with these hangmen's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangmen dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

HANK. * n. s. [hank, Icelandic, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

A hank of gold or silver thread. Sherrwood.

2. A type; a check; an influence. A low word, as Dr. Johnson says; yet, it may be added, very common; as, to have a hank upon a person, i. e. to have a hold upon him. Mr. H. Tooke hence considers hank as the past participle of hang, i. e. to have something hung upon him. But the Icelandic hank, which denotes a chain, a collar, is here also a satisfactory etymon; and the Latin uncus may accompany it.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Dancy of Pary.

In Horace, Necessity is furnished, if I may so express myself, with her hand and her fastenings, which she carries in her brazen hand.

Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 267.

3. In naval language, hanks are wooden rings fixed on the stays.

4. In the north of England, a withy or rope for fastening a gate. [Swed. hank,
the same.]

TO HANK. * v. n. [from the noun.] To form into hanks. Used in the north of England.

TO HANKER. * v. n. [hanken, Dutch.
Serenius would refer it to hank; or, secondly, to the Su. henga efter, to desire greatly.]

1. To long importunately; to have an incessant wish; it has commonly (but not always) after before the thing desired.
It is scarcely used but in familiar language, Dr. Johnson says; yet it has been employed on the most serious subjects. See HANKERING.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant bankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Dost thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town. Addison.

2. To linger with expectation.

It cannot but be very dangerous for you to hanker herabout.

Slokes on the Prophecy, (1659), p. 220.

HA'NKERING. * n. s. [from hanker.] Strong desire; longing.

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had years'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowled hankering,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after those juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange.

The republic that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankering after its ancient liberty. Addison.

We shall be able to part both with it and them,
[the body and its delights], without any great regret or reluctance; and to live from them for ever, without any disquieting longings or hanker-

To HA'NKLE* v. n. [from hank.] To twist; to entangle. Still used in the north of England.

HA'NSEL* See HANDELL.

HANT, for has not, or have not.

That roguish leer of yours makes a pretty woman's heart ache; you hant that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HA'NTLE, or HA'NDYLE* n. s. A handful; much. A northern word. Grose, and Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss.

HAP-† n. s. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Tyrwhitt refers happe in Chaucer to the Saxon; but Mr. Chalmers observes, that there is no such word, of this meaning, in that language; Hap is, in the Welsh, chance, luck, good fortune; and anhap, mischance, as already observed. Serenius, however, notices under happy, the Goth. hap, inperata felicitas.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap, As through the flowering forest rash she fled, In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap, And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did encwrap. Spenser, F. Q. i.

Her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Box. Rush, ii. 3.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curs'd be good haps, and curs'd be they that build Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected winnower that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see the example followed. Hooder.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think of cannot still have the like hap. Hooder.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared she among the banits to stray Of armed men; for often had she seen The tragick end of many a bloody fray; Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HA-HA'RLOT* n. s. A coarse coverlet. Wachter's strange commentary on this word, is, "Hap-harlot, a close covering; Lat. cento, lecti stragulum crassius, q. d. a harlot by hap, &c. si desit meretricis, detur aliquod forte fortuna ad fovendas artus, &c. Vox ludicra!"—The word is an old expression for a coverlet; and is in the former part of it derived from hap, to cover; not from hap, chance, as Wachter pretends. The latter part might be thought to be from 'til, a bed, like coverlet, if the word were not written hap-harlot, and hap-harlot, by our old writers; though Ainsworth writes it happaret. The allusion is to harlot (not in Wachter's coarse sense of it, but) in the sense of a servant; implying that it was a rug fit only for a low person or servant; as dagwain, a kindred term, seems to have been a similar article proper only for one of low rank, a swain. Barret, in his Alveary of 1580, thus explains it, "a coarse covering made of divers shreds; and Huloet, before him, "a coverlet so called." The ridiculous remark of Wachter required animadversion; especially as it has been admitted into the Rev. Mr. Lemon's Etymological Dictionary without refutation. Hap, or happin, is still our northern word for a rug or coarse coverlet.

Our fathers, yea and we ourselves also, have lien full oft upon straw pallets, on rough mats covered only with a sheet under coverlets made of dagwain, or hap-harlots: I use thy own terms. Harrison, Desc. of Eng. ch. 12. Prof. to Hildesheim.

HA-HA'ZARD. n. s. Chance; accident; perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooder.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.
We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Lalce.

TO HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel.
And tell my lord and lady what hap'd. Shakespeare.

In destruction by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

TO HAP* v. a.

1. To cover, [perhaps from the Sax. heapan, to heap upon.] In the north of England, to heap clothes on one. Ray. In some places, to cover from danger.

There, one garment will serve a man most commonly two years: for why should he desire more? seeing if he had them, he should not be the better happ or covered from cold. Robinson, Transl. of More's Utopia, (1551,) ii. 4.

2. To catch; to seize; to take, [old Fr. happer; either perhapp from the Lat. rappio, or capio.] Sherwood.

HA-P* n. s. A rug, or coarse coverlet. See HA-HARLOT.

HA'PLESS. adv. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Happyless Egeon, whom the fates have mark'd To bear the extremity of dire mishap! Shakspeare.
Here happyless Icarus had found his part, Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden.

Did his hapless passion equal mine, I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be. This love of theirs myself have often seen, Haply when they have judg'd me too fast asleep. Shakspeare.

To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge From penury, because from death releas'd? Milton, P. L.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouched, Though that seems strange. Rome.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, as his haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream, Him haply slumbering on the Norway foam, The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff Dooming some island oft, as wrensem tell, With fatal anchor in his scaly rind, Moors by his side. Milton, P. L.

TO HA'PPEN. v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.

Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Junius, lib. 22.

Say not I have sinned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclesi, v. 4.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Growth.

HA'PPEN, or HA'PPENS* adv. Used in the north adverbially for possibly, perhaps. Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss. and Craven Dialect.

TO HA'PPER* v. n. To hap; to skip about. See TO HOP. The Scotch thus use hap.

Those shameless companions, which attribute unto themselves the name of the company of Jesus; which are, within these forty years, crawled out of the bottomless pit, to happer and swarm throughout the world. Harmer, Tr. of Ben's Sermon, (1587,) p. 242.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully. I come to write it happily in Padua.

If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakespeare.
Preferred by conquest, happily overthrowing, Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.

Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a happily for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPIN. n. s. A rug, or coarse covering. See HA-HARLOT.

HA'PPINESS. n. s. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and continueth in it after an eminent sort the contentment of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooder.

Oh! happiness of sweet retired contentment. To be at once secure and innocent. Dromond.

Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

Fortunous elegance; unstudied grace. Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Declan.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare. For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.

HA'PPY.† adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck. See HAF.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end 'Twas did Striphon land. Her happy making hand. Sidney.

Am I happy in thy news? — If to have done the thing you gave in charge Beget you happiness, be happy then; For 't is done. Shakspeare.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine About the supreme throne Of him, to whose happy making sight alone, — Our heavenly guide's soul shall climb. Milton, Ode on Time.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chrymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in his agony his fancy wrought, And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

Desire his service, Tell him wherein you are happy. Shakspeare.

One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another craves in a rejoinder. Swift.

4. Propitious; favourable. A Latinism.

Not in use. Therefore, for goodness sake, and as you're known

The first and happiest bearers of the town, Be sad, as we would make you. Prod. Shakspeare's A. Hen. VIII.

Recollecting the extreme vigilance, with which the harems of the East are guarded. Scripture Illustr. Expos. Ind.

HAR'ANGUE.† n. s. [harangue, French.] The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of hearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or oratione, oratorion, orator, oranger, haranguer. Dr. Johnson. —

The word is merely the pure and regular past participle, hany, of the Anglo-Saxon verb hanyan, to sound, or to make a great sound; (as himo is also used.) And M. Casseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says, "Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contention de voix." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 274. The French word is from the English.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors' mis'd,

Assaulted, and harangues are heard; but soon In faction opposition. Milton, P. L.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

The House impeach him; Conspicuously harangue. Pope.

TO HAR'ANGUE.† v. a. To address by an oration; as, he harangued the troops.

HAR'ANGUER.† n. s. [from harangue.] An orator; a public speaker; generally with some mixture of contempt.

Turns the occasion takes, and cries aloud, Talk on, you quaint haranguers of the crowd. Dryden, Æn.

We are not to think every clamorous haranguer, or every splenetic repiner against a court, is therefore a patriot. Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, § 23.

TO HAR'ASS.† v. a. [harasser, Fr. from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Sax. heargan, to spoil, to lay waste; a military word, from which also to harrow is derived; Icel. herian; Su. Goth. haeria, the same, from haer, an armed force; Sax. hepe. Serenius partly inclines to this etymon. The primitive sense of the word, therefore, which has hitherto been overlooked, is that of spoliation by an enemy.

1. To desolate; to waste; to destroy. A multitude of tyrants, which have for a long while harassed and wasted the soul. Hammond, Works, iv. 562.

2. To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness. These troops came to the army but the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Becon.

Our walls are thinly man'd, our best men slain; The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching, And harass'd us with duty. Dryden.

To hare and rate them, is not to teach but vex them. Locke.

HA'REBEL. n. s. [hare and bell.] A blue flower campaniform.

Thou shalt not lack
The flow'r that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The saur'd harebell, like thy veins. Shaks. Cymb.

HA'REBRAINED. adj. [from hare, the verb, and brain. Dr. Johnson. — Yet, at hair-brained, Dr. Johnson tells us, we should read hare-brained, i. e. wild and unsettled as a hare! — Whether from the animal, or the verb meaning to hurry, certain it is, that harebrained is the old spelling, as in Barret's Alv. 1580, and elsewhere.

Burton has "a bold, harebrained, mad fellow." Anst. of Mel. To the Read. p. 40. Volatile; unsettled; wild; fluttering; hurried.

The overmuch folly of many clients lath, and doth maintain the lawyer to be both worn within and abroad; whyle my harebrained clients must tarry and attend without. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580), fol. 29. b.

That harebrained will follow begins to play the fool, when others are weary of it. Bacon.

HA'RLEQUIN.† n. s. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le Quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented M. Harlay's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, little Harlay, Trevoux. Dr. Johnson. — M. de Harlay, Mr. Malone observes, lived in the time of Henry the Third of France, viz. 1574—1589; and M. Guet says, that he had the same account, which Menage relates, from Harlequin himself. Notwithstanding this, the name of harlequinus is found in a letter of M. Haulin in 1521. "Vis antiquum illam Harlequinus familiar revocare, ut videtur mortuus inter mundane curie nebulas et caliginis equitate?" p. 28. Further, it might almost as well be considered a diminutive of the old Fr. arlot, a cheat, as of M. Harlay's name. Nash, in the Epistle Dedicatory to his Almond for the last summer, and taking Bergamo in my way homeward to England, it was my happe, sojourning there some four or five days, to light in fellowship with that famous Franca Hip' Harleken, who, perceiving me to be an Englishman by my habit and speech, asked me many particulars of the order and manner of our plays, which he termed by the name of representations."] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zany.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man is graver tragic known,

Though his best part long since was done,

Sill on the stage desires to tarry;

And he who play'd the harlequin,

After the jest still loughs the scene,

Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.

To HA'RLEQUIN.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To conjure away, like a harlequin.

Monkeys have been

Extreme good doctors for the spleen;

And katten, if the humour bit,

Has harlequin'd away the fit. Green, Poem of the Spleen, ver. 96.

HA'RLOCK.* n. s. A plant: It may be a corruption of charlock. But see also HARDOCK.

The honey-suckle, the harlocks,

The lilly, &c. Drayton, Eccl. (1595.)

HA'RLOT.† n. s. [harlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others from harlot, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Harlot is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge. Dr. Johnson. — Hickeys first suggested that harlot (i. e. harlot) is the diminutive of hore, in which manner hore was formerly written; from the Sax. hup. Mr. H. Tooke agrees with Hickeys; pronouncing the word as the past participle of hupan, to hire, i. e. denoting any person hired. Thus Mr. Bagshaw deduces it from hire and let; and cites, in proof, an old indictment against certain women, "common harlots of their bodies." This, I may add, agrees with the ancient notion of this character; a harlot being, as Plautus observes, quæ ipsa seæ vendit. Mil. Glorios. A. 2. S. 3. — Bullet, however, refers the word to the Welsh harlot, or Mr. Chalmers agrees with him; harlodes meaning, in that language, a hidden or romping girl; and harled and harlotyn, a stripling, a youth. And thus, in our old language, harlot was applied to both sexes. In the Rom. of the Rose, "king of harlots," as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is Chaucer's translation of "roy des ribaulx"; and, as a writer, nearly two centuries before Mr. Tyrwhitt, remarks, "the king of ribalds or harlots, or evil and wicked persons, was an officer of great account in times past — sic autem appellantur, quia jani tum homines perditu ribaldi, et ribalde mulieres puellæque credita vocantur. Regis nomen superiori auti iudici tribuitur, &c." Fr. Thynne's Annals, on Speght's Chaucer, 1598. Thus harlots (ribaldi et ribalde) were clearly of both sexes, the Fr. ribaud, a rogue, and ribaudie, a trull. Our old language applies the word, in this sense, to men. In the Cornish, harlot means a rogue. So in old Fr. arlot, "fripon, coquin, voleur." Roq. Indeed, so far back as about the close of our Henry the Third's reign, a royal mandate was issued against "certain vagrant persons calling themselves harlots, maintaining idleness in divers parts of our realm; most shamelessly making their meetings, &c. against the honesty of the church and good manners." Fox's Acts and Mon. p. 305. Fox considers them as "people of a lewd disposition and uncivil," and at the same time as a pretended religious order. "It is most probable," he adds, "that the reproachful name of harlot had its beginning from hence."] 1. A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with

Some harlot's spirit. Shakespeare.

They help thee by such aids as greet

And harlots. R. Jonson.

The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;
Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace.
Dryden.

2. A base person; a rogue; a cheat. Apparently the earliest usage of the word. See the etymology.

Whether we [be] the false harlots, and you the true men.

Des. bet. Enob. and Theop. (1556), sign. b. 6. b.

No man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, praised us such preaching.

For. Acts and Mon. Exam. of W. Thorpe.

3. A servant.

A sturdy harlot went hem ay behind,
That was but hoots man, and bare a sakkie,
And what men yave him, laid it on his bakke.

Chaucer, Semp. Tale.

From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail
'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin.

Dryden.

3. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-will'd harlotry,
That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakspere.

A kind of common and harlotry Venus, which deriving only from the body and a branch of the animal life, draws down the soul to what is merely corporeal, and, mingling with it, defiles and pollutes it.

Holtyer, Excell. of Mer. Virtue, (1692), p. 111.

4. Any thing meretricious.

The harlotry of the ornaments.

Pursuits of Literature.

HARM† n. s. [hearm, Sax. harm, Su.
Goth. harm was in Anglo-Saxon harm, or iepm, i. e. whatsoever harmeth or hurtheth; the third person singular of the indicative of harmen, or iepmen, to hurt. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 425.
Mr. Tooke might have added, on the authority of Somner, the verb hearm.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise Powers Deny us for our good. Shakspere.

How are we happy still in four of harm?
But harm precedes not sin. Milton, P. L.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil counsels. Swift.

To HARM† v. a. [Sax. hearmian.] To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her steel'n hours or lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me.

Shakspere, Othello.

ing, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Achens.

HA'RMFULNESS. n. s. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HA'RMLESS† adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful; not doing harm.

Touching ceremonies, harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it unwise to decree that those things that were least needful, and newest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hooker.

She, like harvest lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting Each object with a joy. Shakspere.

2. Unhurt; undamaged; not receiving harm.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh.

HA'RMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Wilton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers.

Deacy of Pity.

HA'RMLESSNESS. n. s. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through careless flat familiarity,
In doubtless'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.

Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity,
the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged, long-practised sinner. South.

HARMONICAL. adj. [harmōnikē; harmo-
HARMONICK. } nique, Fr.]

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requires,

And Virgil's sacred work shall die.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move
Harmonious numbers. Milton, P. L.

The voice of Chaucer is not harmonious to us:
they who lived with him thought it musical.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world harmoniously confus'd:

Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.

Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillingfleet.

Romanusq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harp. Ven. Fort.

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests' cruel wreck He forth was thrown into the greedy sea, Through the sweet music which his harp did make, Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenker.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd God and his works. Milton, P. L.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire; The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies

The shell, as lightest first begins to rise; This when sweet Orpheus struck, to listening rocks He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [heappian, Saxon; harper, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev. xiv. 2.

The belm'd cherubim, And sworded seraphim, Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd, Harping in loud and solemn quire, With unexpressive notes to Heaven's new-born heir. Milton, Ord. Nativ.

You harp a little too much upon one string. Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke, Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason For inequality; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear. Shakep. Meas. for Meas.

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am, Not what he knew I was. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.

To HARP. * v. a.

1. To play upon the harp.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

2. To touch; to affect; to move.

For thy good caution thanks, Thou hast harp'd my fear aright. Shakep. Macbeth.

HARPER.† n. s. [heappene, Saxon.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd, Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue; Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shakespeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop, my falset: — in vain; Nor the harp, nor the harper could fetch her again. Tickell.

HARPING IRON. n. s. [from harpagon, Lat.]

A bearded dart, with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go, Struck with a harping-iron the younger foe; Who when he felt his side so rudely gor'd, Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Walker.

HARPINGS. * n. s. pl. In naval language, the breadth of a ship at the bow; the fore part of the wales which go round the bow, and are fastened into the stem.

HARPIST. * n. s. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

See — cuo no less Tame the fierce walkers of the wilderness, Than that Oengrian harpist, for whose lay Tigers with hunger pin'd, and left their prey. Brown, Brit. Poet. B. i. 5.

HARPONEER. n. s. [harponeur, Fr. from harpion.] He that throws the harpoon in whale-fishing.

HARPOON.† n. s. [harpon, Span. an arrow; harpun, Fr. from the Gr. ἁρπύνη.] A harping iron.

Some fish with harpoons, some with darts are struck, Some drawn with nets, some hang upon the hook. Dryden.

HARPOONER. * See HARPONEER.

HARPSICORD.† n. s. [old Fr. harpechorde.] Our word was formerly written harpicon. A musical instrument, strung with wires, and played by striking keys.

Let them run divisions on the harpsicon or virginals. Purcell's Sec. 1 (1685), p. 144.

He would exactly perform his part of many things to a harpsicon or theorbo.

Full, Life of Hammond.

I shall allow them to be harpsichords, a kind of music, which every one knows is a consort by itself. Teller, No. 183.

HARPYS. n. s. [harpysia, Lat. harpie, harpie, Fr.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Ralegh.

That an harpie is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambaunce to the pismires, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HARQUEBUSS.† n. s. [See ARQUEBUSS.] Ital. arca bowan, the bow with a hole; whence archibuto, archibugio. Our old spelling was also harcbusse, or harca-buze. A hand gun.

There entered into it as good as a dozen Frenchmen, well appointed with their harcbusses and matches lighted. Shelton, Transl. of Don Quix. iv. 14.

HARQUEBUSSIER. n. s. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knox.

HARR. * n. s. A storm proceeding from the sea. See EAORE. Coles.

q q

HARRATE'N.* n. s. A kind of stuff, or cloth.

Mean time, this silver'd with meanders gay,
In mimic pride the snail-wrought tissue shines,
Perfervence of talley or of harratens.
Not ill expressive; such the power of snails!

Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

HARRIDAN. n. s. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and drunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

Swift.

HARRIER.* n. s. A hare-hound. See HARRIER.

HARRICO.* See HARICOT.

HARRROW. n. s. [charrrou, French: harcke, Germ. a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrow. Dryden.
Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer.

To HARRROW† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.
Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tusser.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his land in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job, xxxix. 10.

Let the Volscians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shakespeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood, Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakespeare.

Imagine you behold the bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rome.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. [Sax.
hegvan; Fr. harier. See TO HARASS.]

As the king did secret in good commonwealth laws, so he had in deed a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions; to subdue. [Sax. hegan.] Obsolete.

And he, that harrow'd hell with heavy store,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Spenser, F. Q.

Most glorious Lord of Life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, dost'st bring away
Captivity these captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion; to overpower. [This should rather be written
harry. See TO HARRY.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder.

Shakespeare.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.

Milton, Comus.

HARR'OW. interj. [old Fr. harau, haro;
answering to the modern heav and cry;
Su. Goth. haerop, from haer, har, an army, and op, a cry.] An exclamation of sudden distress; a cry for help. Obsolete.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly demur'd! Spenser.

HARROWER† n. s. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

The natives were likewise bound to give three plowdays each; and every plow was to be allowed four boon-leaves, and to harrow three days; and every harrower was allowed a brown loaf, and two herrings a day. Brown, Anc. Ten. p. 143.

2. A kind of hawk.

To HARRY† v. a. [Fr. harier; Sax. hegan.
See TO HARASS.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle; to vex.
Minsheu.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.—
I repent me much.

That I so harried him. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. In Scotland and in some parts of the north of England it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away;
as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See the fifth sense of TO HARROW. Milton also has thus used harry, as Mr. Brockett has observed.

The Saxons, with perpetual landings and invasions harried the South coast of Britain.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. ii.

To HARRY* v. n. To make harassing incursion.

What made your roughships

Harrying for virtuals here? Boswell, and Fl. Bonduca.

HARSH† adj. [Dutch, harash; Su. Goth. harak. Formerly written harish, and also harsh.]

1. Austere; roughly; sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear.

Denham.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denigrate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our nature, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unamical to Volcanic ears,

And harsh in sound to thine. Shakespeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But native needs not that, and will still shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line.

Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.
Bare patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Ep. Tylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise.

Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard on intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

Aitbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles' points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.

5. Unpleasant; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher
charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere; to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

Full, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease

3. Severely; morose; crabbedly.

I would rather be a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Greeting so harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dang'rous luxury. Shakspeare.
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Seest out a jarring sound, and harshly rung.

Dryden.

HARSHNESS† n. s. [from harsh. It is rarely used in the plural; but Jeremy Taylor has somewhere so employed it.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard:
the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of his sound? Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;

The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness or ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender befet nature shall not give Three o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort and soft burn. Shakespeare.

Thy beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love,
Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness.

Donne, Poems, p. 257.

HART† n. s. [heort, Saxon.] A he-deer;
the male of the hind; the stag.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fall and cruel bounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.

The deer

And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. Mey, Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. s. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. s. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms.
What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Rainose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn.

Woodward.

HA'RTSHORN. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.
HA'RTSTONGUE. n. s. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.
Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

So saxifrage is good, and hartstongue, for the stone. Dryden, Polyd. S. 13.

HA'RTWORT. n. s. [tordylium, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HA'RVEST. † n. s. [hæpfer, Saxon; herfit, Dutch; herbst, German. Some derive it from the Lat. herba and festum, q. d. festivitas herbarum; others, from Hertha, the Vestal of the ancient Germans, and Dutch, feest, q. d. the feast of the Earth. Serenius, from the Su. Goth. ar, the year, and visit, provision, q. d. provision for the whole year.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it eteth, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Spenser.
With harvest work he is worse than in spring. L'Estreng.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned. From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakspeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour. Let us the harvest of our labour eat,
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HA'RVEST-HOME. n. s.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest. Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn it is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest. At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay. Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure. His wife I will use as the key of the cuckold's rogue's collar; and there's my harvest-home. Shakspeare.

HA'RVEST-LORD. n. s. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tyner.

HA'RVEST-QUEEN. n. s. [harvest and queen.] An image apparelled in great finery, crowned with flowers, a sheaf of corn placed under her arm, and a sickle in her hand, carried out of the village in the morning of the conclusive reaping-day, with music and much clamour of the reapers into the field, where it stands fixed on a pole all day; and, when the reaping is done, is brought home in like manner. This they call the harvest-queen, and it represents the Roman Ceres.

Hutchinson, Hist. of Northumberland.

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wore
Of choicest flowers a garland, to adorn
Her tresses, and her rural labours crown;
As reapers oft are wont their harvest-queen.

Milton, P. L.

To HA'RVET. † v. a. [from the noun.] To gather in. [revest.] Sherwood.

I have seen a stock of reeds harvested and stacked, worth two or three hundred pounds. Pennant, Tour in Scotland.

HA'RVETER. † n. s. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

I have appointed you, as harvesters, to go abroad in all the world, and bring in converts to heaven. Hammond on the New Testament, 1 Pet. ii. 9.

HA'RVETMAN. † n. s. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

In this large field of the Scriptures, a man may gather some corn untouched after the harvestmen, how diligent soever they were.

Alp. Parker, Prof. of the Old Test.

Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakspeare.

HA'RUMSCARUM. † adj. A low but frequent expression applied to flighty persons, persons always in a hurry; as if they were hared or frightened themselves, or haring others by their precipitancy; as, he is a harumscarum fellow. Grose, who notices this colloquial term, connects it with the verb hare, to affright, to make wild; others, both with that verb and with scare, though in our northern parts the word is harumstarum; and some, with the German herum, here and there. Mr. Brockett adds the German expression, herum-schar, a wandering troop; plural, scharen, vagabonds.

To HANH. v. a. [hacker, Fr.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm,
Above his head, and rain'd a storm,
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hack her quick. Hudibras.
What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness: but *hack*ed up in haste. Garth.

HASH. † n. s. [from the verb. Fr. hachis.] Minced meat; "a hacher, a sliced calamity, or minced meat." Colgrave.

HASK. † n. s. [Swedish, hassat, a rush.] This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phoebus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' hask. Spenser.

HASK. † adj. [hisco, Lat.] Parched; coarse; rough; dry. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

HA'SLET. } n. s. [hasla, Icelandic, a HA'SLET. } bundle; haslet, hastereau, hastier, Fr.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP. † n. s. [heap, Saxon; whence in some provinces it is yet called Aspie.]
1. A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

2. A spindle to wind silk, thread, or yarn upon. [old Fr. haspe; Teut. haspe, haspel.] Skinner.

To HASP. † v. a. [Sax. heaprian.] To shut with a hasp.

Hope in a tomb, upwardly you're shin'd
With one fat slave before, and none behind.
Garth, Diana. C. 5.

HA'SOCK. n. s. [haseck, German. Skinner.
—hwas, Swed. a rush, and sack, a sack. Serenius.]

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hasock and common prayer-book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hasock and hask are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of haste.

HASTE. n. s. [haste, Fr.; hæste, Dutch.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
But O, thou wilt not, cannot not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
To both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.
The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste, all men are liars. Poems.

To HASTE. } v. n. [haster, Fr. hæsten,
To HA'STEN. } Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jr.

2. To move with swiftness; eagerness; or hurry.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to? Shakspeare.

They were troubled and hasted away. Poems.
All those things are passed away like a shadow,
And as a post that hasteth by. Wisdome.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea.
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Demetrius.
These rites perform'd, the prince without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.
Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Priority.

TO HASTE. † v. a. To push forward; to HASTE. † to urge on; to precipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasted, that appear be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakespeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past; To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.
Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens, nor retards his neighbour's race.

Prior.

HASTENER. † n. s. [from hasten.]

1. One that hastens or hurries. Sherwood.

2. One that precipitates, or urges on.

[They] took upon them to be the saviours and preservers of the city; but, as it proved, the hasteners and precipitators of the destruction of that kingdom. Hammond, Works, iv. 590.

Fride and indigence, the two great hasteners of modern poems. Johnson, Rambler, No. 169.

HASTILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; lightly; quickly.

A voice, that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Wallis.

The next to danger, hot pursuit by fate,
Half cloth'd half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HASTINESS. n. s. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basiliss. Scincy.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verve, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers and his gravity, I have as he imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HASTINESS. † n. s. pl. [from hasty.]

1. Peas that come early.

As loud as one that singe his part
To a wheel-barrow, or turnip-cart,
Or your new nick-named old invention
To cry green hastings with an engine. Hudibras, Ep. to Squire.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Morimer.

2. Any early fruit; as, hastings for pears and apples soon ripe. Cotgrave and Sherwood. So likewise roses d'hastiveness, very forward roses. Cotgrave.

HASTIV. adj. [hastiv, Fr. from haste; hastig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

It is this counsel that we two have shad,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time. Shakespeare.

For parding us!

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit enlargeth folly. Prov. xiv. 29.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov. xii. 10.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccles. v. 2.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer. Isaiah, xviii. 4.

HASTY-PUDDING. n. s. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT. n. s. [Het, Saxon; hatt, German.]

A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thumb hat, and her muffler too. Shakespeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stamp on the king's coin. Shakespeare.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd;
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings diad'm'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.

HAT-BAND. n. s. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HATBOX. * n. s. [hat and box.] The modern word for hatscase. See HATCASE.

HATCASE. n. s. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatscase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

TO HATCH. † v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from heghen, eghen, &c., egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his specious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Desh.

The tepid caves, and fens, and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from the eggs,
That soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclaim'd
Their callow young. Milton, P. L.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray.

Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and I doubt not, will easily confus, who live to their great both toll and grief, where the blasphemies of Arias are renewed by them, who to hatch their heresy have chosen these churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Haywood.

Thy wicked head never at rest, but hammering And hatching hellish things. Brown, and Fl. Night Walker.

5. [From hacker, Fr. to cut, particularly to engrave upon the hilt of a sword. V. Cotgrave in HACRÉ. See also HATCHING.] To shade by lines in drawing or

Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatched. Chaymon.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air strong as the axle tree
On which heaven rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experience's tongue. Shakespeare.

Those tender airs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of mined meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden.

Why should not I
Doat on my horse well trapp'd, my sword well hatch'd? Bacon, and Fl. Bonduca.

Some grave instructors on my life, they look
For all the world, like old hatch'd hilts. Bacon, and Fl. Valentinian.

A sword bravely gilt and hatched with gold. Heath, Chron. of the Civ. Wars, p. 411.

In the age of Aristotle, it was generally said that no one had ever seen the hatch of the cuckoo. Tr. Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclosure
Will be some danger. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. [heca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with an opening over it; perhaps from hacker, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shakspeare.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shakespeare, Tempest.

There she's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shakespeare, Tempest.

So seas, impelled by winds with added power,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'd. Dryden.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;
The plank was rarely laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And ship'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

Some, who have been phlegmatick, and therefore meek, or kept under hatches, and therefore lowly. Denn Perce, Scen. 28 May 1661, p. 24.

He assures us how this hatch continues in its course, till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainworth.
 To HA'TCHEL.† v. s. [hachelen, Germ.]
 To beat flax, so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

His teeth are very industrious in their calling;
 and his chops like a Bridewell perpetually hatcheling. Bulwer, Rem. ii. 462.

The asbestos, mentioned by Kircher in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrement, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his Mundus
Subterraneus. Woodward.

HA'TCHEL.† n. s. [from the verb; hachell, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten. Sherwood.

HA'TCHELLER.† n. s. [from hatchel.] A beater of flax. [serancier, Fr.]

 of business. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

HA'TCHET.† n. s. [hache, hachette, Fr.;
accia, Latin. See To HACK. Our word was formerly written without the t, agreeably to the etymology. See Bulder's Eng. Gramm. 1633. p. 35.] A small axe.

The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of stuff.
Milton.
 His brawny hatchet he bent in his hand,
 And to the field he speedeth. Spenser.
 Ye shall have a hearken caudle then, and the help of a hatchet.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and hammers strong.

Tyrrebus, the foster-father of the beast,
 Then clenched a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryd.
 Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet; and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor. Addison.

HA'TCHET-FACE. n. s. An ugly face; such,
 I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace;
 An ugly beast adorns a hatchet-face. Dryden.

HA'TCHING.† n. s. [from the fifth sense of
To hatch.] A kind of drawing. See
To ETCH.

[The] figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in. Harris.

HA'TCHMENT.† n. s. [corrupted from achievement, sometimes written, and also pronounced, achievement.] An armorial escutcheon, exhibited on the hearse at funerals; and sometimes hung up in churches.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
 No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
 No noble rights nor formal ostentation.

Cry to be heard. Shakespeare.
 I would have master Pynd-manle, her grace's herald, to pluck down his hatchments, reverse his coat armour, and nullify him for no gentleman.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.
 Receive these pledges.
 These hatchments of our grief, and grace us so much.

To place 'em on this hearse. Boswell and Fl. Bonduca.

HA'TCHWAY.† n. s. [hatches and way.]
 The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE. v. s. [hætan, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.
 — Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me. Shakespeare.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
 — Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
 — Every offence is not a hate at first. Shakespeare.

Those old inhabitants of thy holy land, whom thou hast for doing most odious works.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
 Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love. Dryden.

HATE. n. s. [hæte, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
 Thy favours nor your hate. Shakespeare.
 Hate to Menenius, arm'd five hundred more.

Dryden.
 Nausica teaches that the afflicted are not always the objects of divine hate.

Broom, Notes on the Odyssey.
 HA'TEABLE.† adj. [from hate.] Detestable. It should be written hateable.

Sherwood.

HA'TEFUL. adj. [hate and full.]
 1. Causing abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth
 — The devil himself could not pronounce a title
 More hateful to mine ear. Shakespeare.

There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude. Preacher.

What owe I to his commands
 Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
 To sit in hateful office here confin'd?
 Inhabitant of heaven, and heav'nly born?

Milton, P. L.
 I hear the tread
 Of hateful steps: I must be witness now.

But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;
 He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow. Pope.

2. Feeling abhorrence; abhorrent; detest-ing; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon compell'd
 No more to try the fortune of the field;
 And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
 His rival's conquest. Dryden.

HA'TEFULLY.† adv. [from hateful.]
 1. Odiously; abominably.

The ceremony was hatefully tedious.
Drammond, Twen. p. 75.

 ousness.

HA'TER. n. s. [from hate.] One that hates;
 an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her understanding that most noble constancy, which whosoever loves not shows himself to be a hater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind. Sidney.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,
 He was my master, and I wore my life.
 To spend upon his hater. Shakespeare.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good.

Brown.
 They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker. South.

HA'TRED. n. s. [from hate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike;
 abhorrence; detestation; abomination;
 the passion contrary to love.

Hated is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us.

Locke.
 I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
 To oppose his hatred fully. Shakespeare.

Hated is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object.

South.
Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world.

Locke.
 Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able.

Swift.
 She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church.

Swift.
Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and there is a kind of adultery.

HA'TTED.† adj. [from hat.] Wearing a hat of any kind.

It is as easy way unto a duchess,
 As to a hated dame. Tournefort, Revençer's Trag.

Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss.

HA'TTUCK.† n. s. [attuck, Erse.] A shock of corn; containing twelve sheaves according to some; and only three sheaves laid together according to others.

HAUBERK.† n. s. [hauberg, old French.
 See HABERGON.] A coat of mail without sleeves, made of plate or of chain-mail.

And on the hauberk struck the prince so sore,
 That quite dispar'd all the linked frame,
 And pierc'd to the skin. Sydney, F. Q.

Hauberk and helmets are hewed with many a wound;

The mighty maces with such haste decer'd,
 They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend. Dryden.

To HAVE.† v. a. in the present I have,
 thou hast, he hath; we, ye, they have;
 pret. and part. pass. had. [haben, Gothick; habban, Saxon; habben, Dutch;
haber, old French; habeo, Latin. The Saxons also had hajan; Iscl. hafa; Su.
Goth. hafra; modern French, avoir;
Ital. avere.]

Your plea is good; but still I say beware: Lovers are explored by men; so have a care. Pope.
11. To hold; to regard.
Of them shall I be kind in honour. 2 Sam.
The proud have had me greedily in derision. Psalm.
12. To maintain; to hold opinion.
Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves. Bacon.
13. To contain.
You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister. Shakespeare.
I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him, by wearing his apparel neatly. Shakespeare.
14. To require; to claim.
What would these madmen have? First they would bribe us without price, Deceive us without common sense, And without pow'r enslave. Dryden.
15. To be a husband or wife to another.
If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. Shakespeare.
16. To be engaged as in a task or employment.

18. To buy.
If those trifles were rated only at art and artfulness, we should have them much cheaper. Cicero.
19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, had, and hath or has, the preterperfect; and had and hadst the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words even between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Cicero.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up to all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an insupportable pleasure in it. Adams.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Adams.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Adams.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Adams.

This observation we have made on man. Adams.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body, habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Adams.

These torments have already taken root in their minds. Adams.

That excellent author has shown how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practice it. Adams.

20. Have at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you; or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as more elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him. Dr. Johnson. — Have with you is a common expression denoting readiness to attend another; meaning, I will go along with you.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakespeare.

I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,
And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,
In fighting fields pursue'd and found their fate.
Dryden.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:
Her goodness takes their liberty away;
And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway.
Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous; of high hazard.

Obsolete.
Who now shall give me words and sound
Equal unto this haughty enterprise?

trees. Sonnet, K. James's Lepanto, (1591.)
Yes, God who rules the haughty heaven abhorr'd,
Enrich'd my realm, with foyson of each thing;
Abundant store did make my people sing.
Mer. for Mag. p. 306.

HA'VINO.† n. s. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune. [Span. hacienda.]

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you;
Hold, there is half my coffer.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Our content is our best having.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side, was alleged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the second.
Sidney.
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion;
And having that, do cloak their service up,
Er'v' with the having. Shakespeare, As you like it.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scottish dialect. [haef, Sw. Goth. from haefva, to become.] It may possibly be the meaning, Dr. Johnson says, in the following example from Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor; and yet in a note upon the word, in the edition of the poet, he positively states it to be, in this very passage, the same, as estate or fortune; which indeed it is. In Devonshire, according to Grose, havance denotes manners, good behaviour.

The gentleman is of no having; he kept company with the wild princes and Follies; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakespeare.

HA'VIOUR.† n. s. [for behaviour, Dr. Johnson says. But it is not an abbreviation of behaviour; for it was formerly a very common word, and is yet retained in low language; as, do you think I have forgot my haivours, i. e. my manners?] from the Su. Goth. haefva, to become.] Conduct; manners.

Her heavenly havour, her precious grace,
Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.
Their ill havour garres men missey
Both of their doctrine and their fay.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Put thyself
Into a haivour of love fair. Shakespeare, Cymb.

To HAUL. v. a. [hale, French to draw.]
To pull; to draw; to drag by violence.
A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and to persons, awkwardness or rudeness. This word is liberally exemplified in hale; etymology is regarded in hale, and pronunciation in haul.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is by base duance and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanic dirty hands. Shaks.

The youth with songs and rhymes,
Some danc'd; some haul'd the rope. Denham.

Secur'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,

Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades. Milton, P. L.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope.

3. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;

I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shakespeare.

Oh, could I see my country seat!
There, leaning o'er a gentle brook;
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

4. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions haunt my sleep by night. Wielsh.

All these woes of Oedipus have known
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.

To HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.

I've charg'd thee not to haunt upon my doors:
In honest sleep thou hast but told me say
My daughter's out for thee. Shakespeare.

Swift.

To dance the HAY. To dance in a circle: probably from dancing round a hay cock, Dr. Johnson says. It is, no doubt, from dancing in a kind of circle; and is probably from the Fr. huit, eight; for the dance is borrowed by us from the French. It was formerly written hey, as if an abbreviation of heydeguyet, a country-dance or round. See HEYDEGUYET.

He taught them rounds and winding hays to tread,

And about trees to cast themselves in rings.

Sir J. Davies, Orchest. (1599).

I will play on the hay.

And let them dance the hay.

This mids think on the hearth they see,

When hays will nigh consumed be.

Then dancing hays by two and three,

Just as your fancy casts them.

I will upon all hazard well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shakespeare.

Where the mind does not perceive consequence, there men's opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures without choice and without direction.

Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the Father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard,

but with the certain loss of thousands of souls,

most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate.

Dryden.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers.

out breaking your head, and being so very industrious in starting scruples. Dryden.

The lazy and inconsiderate took up their opinions by chance, without much beating their heads about them. Locke.

If a man shows that he has no religion, why should we think that he beats his head and troubles himself to examine the grounds of this or that doctrine? Locke.

When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; and when we say of a woman that she has a fine head, we speak only in relation to her comeliness. Addison.

We laid our heads together, to consider what grievances the nation had suffered under king George. Addison.

Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul;
I, for myself, the imperial seat will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign.

Dryden.

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force.

Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
Def'd of their prime to arms, nor made account
Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn to?

Philips.

I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato.

Adams.

You will be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour.

Arbutnot.

HE'ADSTRONGNESS.† n. s. [from head- strong]. Obstinacy; like that of a horse, whose head cannot be held in, or which will not be guided.

Romance's headstrongness is here remarkable,
and shews that a beast knows when he is weary,
or hungry, better than his rider.

Gayton on Don Quix. p. 6.

HE'ADTIRE.† n. s. [head and tire]. Attire for the head.

An headtire of fine lines, and a chain about his neck.

He nameth divers strange forms of apparel, as their headtire, slugs, headbands, and such like.

A. Wile, Treat. of Manners. &c. (1612), p. 46.

HE'ADWAY.† n. s. [head and way]. In naval language, the motion of advancing at sea.

HEADWORKMAN.† n. s. [head, work, and man]. The foreman, or chief servant over the rest. Properly two words.

Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick, the headworkman, to prepare furnace and stamps?

Swift.

HE'ADY.† adj. [from head].

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'berblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villany.

Shakespeare.

I am advised what I say :
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
Shakespeare.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will
To take the indurp'd and sickly fit
For the sound man.
Shakespeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy. B. Jonan.
Those only are regarded who are true to their party;
and all the talent required is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or other.

Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature. Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.
I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seemed to be sack. Dryden.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julep-dance, pizum of sugar and show;
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
You're come to farce, that's nose's milk, already.
Dryden.

Flow, Waked! flow, like dains inspirer, beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not fall.
Pope.

5. Violent; impetuous.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did low his seat. Shakespeare.
Thou clav'st the rock, from whose green wound
The thirst-exPELLING fountain brake;
Thou mad'st the heady streams forsake
Their channels, and become dry ground. Scotop.

To HEAD† v. a. [hælgan, Gothic; hælan,
Saxon; heelen, Dutch; from the Su.
Goth. hel, whole.]

1. To cure a person; to restore from hurt or sickness.

I will restore health, and heal thee of thy wounds.
Jer. xxi.
Who would not believe that our Saviour healed
the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did same miracles? Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to an incomparable degree of skill in the art of healing.
Wat.

2. To restore any thing from an unsound to a sound state.

He went forth unto the spring of the waters,

Such an expelled he I in hand,
Had you so healthful ear to hear his. Shakespeare.

3. Wholesome; salubrious.

Many good and healthful airs do appear by habitation and proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon.

They pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness; worthy, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves.
Milton, P. L.

Our healthful food the stomach labours thus,
At first embracing what it straight doth crush. Dryden.

4. Salutory; productive of salvation.

Pour upon them the healthful spirit of thy grace.
Common Prayer.

HEALTHFULLY* adv. [from healthful.]
1. In health.

If it be so, that neither for fear nor love thou wilt part with thy goods, yet part with thy prayers for thy king; that he may healthfully, happily, and victoriously reign.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1694), p. 125.

2. Wholesomely.

If merit be disease; if virtue, death;
To be good, not to be; who'd then bequith
Himself to discipline? who'd not esteem
Labour a crime? study self-murder death?
Our noble youth now have pretence to be Dunces securely, ignorant healthfully.
Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

HEALTHFULNESS.† n. s. [from healthful.]

This verse sets forth the healthfulness and vigour of the inhabitants of that fertile country.

Patrick on Gen. xlii. 12.

2. Wholesomeness; salubrious qualities.

You have tasted of that cup whereof I have liberally drank, which I look upon as God's physick, having that in healthfulness which it wants in pleasure. Fing. Charles.

We ventured to make a standard of the healthfulness of the air from the proportion of acute and epidemic diseases. Grew.

To the winds the inhabitants of Geneva ascribe the healthfulness of their air; for as the Alps surround them on all sides, there would be a constant signation of vapours, did not the north wind put them in motion. Addison on Italy.

HEALTHILY* adv. [from healthy.] Without sickness or pain. Sherwood.

HEALTHINESS. n. s. [from healthy.] The state of health.

 Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss. Thoms.
 Nar can Frewill find a place for the sole of her foot among the heapy ruins, wherewith he bestows the ground.

Sourch, Frewill, Fockmanndorfer, & Fote, p. 188.

To HEAR.† v. n. [Sax. hepan, heapan, hypan; Icel. heyrn; Dutch, hooren. See EAR.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflections of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes, nor hear with their own ears. Tenney.

2. To listen; to hearken to: as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam heard, Well-pleas'd, but answer'd not. Milton, P. L.

O! what of gods then loots it to be born,
 If old Aveng's sons so evil bear? Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 23.
 Or hen's thou rather pure ethereal stream,
 Whose fountain who shall tell? Milton, P. L.
 Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth? Prior.

8. To HEAR Say. A thing elliptical expression for to hear a thing said.

A people great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou knowest, and of whom thou hast heard say, who can stand before the children of Anak? Deut. ix. 2.

If thou shalt hear any in one of thy cities, saying, Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you — then shalt thou enquire. Deut. xiii. 12.

9. To HEAR a bird sing. A kind of proverbial expression; implying the receipt of a very particular or private communication.

I hear a bird sing in mine ear,
 That I must either fight or flee.

Old Ballad of the Rising in the North.
 I will lay odds that, ere this year expires,
 We bear our civil sword, and native fire,
 As far as France; I heard a bird to sing.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. p. II.

1 King. Did you observe their whispers, brother King?

2 King. I did; and heard, besides, a grove bird sing.

That they intend, sweetheart, to play us pranks!

Of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as heardsheep, a glorious keeper; sometimes final, as cyncheard, a royal keeper. Gibson's Camden. It is now written herd, as cowherd, a cow-keeper; hyph, Sax.

themselves upon the mountain Baris in Armenia.

Raleigh, Hist.

All the little scammers after fame fall upon him, publish every blot in his life, and depend upon hearsay to defame him. Addison.

HEARSE.† n. s. [of unknown etymology. Dr. Johnson says; yet, under the other form of writing the word, viz. herse, he cites the low Lat. hercia, "supposed to come from the Sax. hepan, to praise."

—Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it the part participle of the Sax. hepan, to adorn, to decorate. Div. Purl. ii. 323.—Serenus derives it from the Goth. heria, a sepulchral mount or hill.—The low

Lat. hercia, or hercia, is said to have been a kind of candlestick, in the form of a harrow, (old Fr. herce), having branches filled with lights, and being placed at the head of graves or cenotaphs; and hence hearse came to be used for the grave, and for the coffin, or chest containing the dead.]

1. A temporary monument set over a grave; according to Huloet, as well as Dr. Johnson. The solemn obsequy at funerals; according to E. K. the contemporary commentator on Spenser.

A cenotaph is an empty funeral monument or tomb, erected for the honour of the dead; in imitation of which our hearses here in England are set up in churches, during the continuance of a year, or the space of certain months.

Bacon, Essays of Adversity.

HEART.† n. s. [Sax. heort; Germ. hertz; Goth. hiarto; Icel. hiarta; "ab ant. hyra, hurra, horfa, move, agitate." Srenius.—"The heart, in the Teutonic languages,—should probably be referred to the Gr. καρδια, in which the rough breathing of the h is hardened into a consonant. Junius has been aware of this connexion." Whiter.]

1. The muscle which by its contraction and dilatation propels the blood through the course of circulation, and is therefore considered as the source of vital motion.

The heart gives heat, and motion, and life, unto that which is to be our mortalment.

Smith on Old Age, p. 236.

2. It is supposed in popular language to be the seat sometimes of courage, sometimes of affection, sometimes of honesty, or baseness.

He with providence and courage so pass'd over all, that the mother took such spiteful grief at it, that her heart brake withal, and she died.

Sidney.

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir, And disinherited thine only son. Shakespeare.

Smokes in my heart-blood warm'd, that stung my heart. Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms, Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;

Then reason with our hearts should be as good.

Shakespeare.

I thank you for my vision, master Shaloon.—Master Page, much good do it your good heart. Shakespeare.

But since the brain doth lodge the powers of sense,

How makes it in the heart those passions spring? The mutual love, the kind intelligence

'Twixt heart and brain, this sympathy doth bring. Dantes.

HEAT.† n. s. [hent, hæst, Saxon; herte, Danish. Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Saxon hætan, to make warm. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we demonstrate the object hot; so what to our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is to the fire hot; and therefore we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Warburton.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning. The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooder.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flowing almonds in the wood; The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign; Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

1. State of any body under the action of the fire. The heats smelt take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Mason.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action uninterrupted. The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort. I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat, And give him not the leisure to repent. Dryden.

They the turn'd lives on golden anvils beat, Which loath as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission. Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speeder pace; But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

9. Pimples in the face; flush. It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action. They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to disperse them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend; And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cur'd By those that feel their sharpness. Shakespeare.

It might have glori'd in the heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displaced in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage. They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

7. To puff; to elate.

The Scots, heav'd up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain.

Hayward.

TO HEAVE. v. n.

1. To pant; to breathe with pain.
He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd down from far, distends his lab'ring side.

Dryden.

2. To labour.

The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days.

Atterbury.

3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.
Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles.

Dryden.

The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart.

Dryden.

Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves.

Prior.

The heaving tide
In widen'd circles beats on either side.

Gay, Trivia.

4. To heave; to feel a tendency to vomit.

HEAVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Lift; exertion or effort upwards.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the first foundation, or swallow them.

Dryden.

2. Rising of the breast.

There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.

Shakespeare.

3. Effort to vomit.

4. Struggle to rise.

But after many strains and heaves,
He got up to his saddle caves.

Hudibras.

HEAVE OFFERING. n. s. An offering among the Jews.

Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor.

Numb.

HE'AVEN.† n. s. [heaven, which seems to be derived from heop, the places over head, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Heaven signifies that which is raised high, or heaved up. Thus Serenity refers it to the verbs haffjan, and hefta, to heave or lift up. See TO HEAVE. And thus Mr. H. Tooke and Mr. Whiter refer it to the Sax. heafan. An ingenious writer deduces the Saxon from the Hebrew he-aphon, or leaving out the e or hiss, he-aphon, that is to say, the round orb of air which is above our heads: from which idea the Latins took their word caelum. See A Commentary on the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, by S. Harris, D.D. 1739, p. 204.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.

A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Shakespeare.

Thy race in time to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

Dryden.

The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens. Baldy, Hist.
This act, with shouts heaven high, the friendly band

Applaud.

Dryden.

Some fires may fall from heaven.

Temple.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.

It is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

These, the late

Heaven-banish'd host, left desert utmost hill.

Milton, P. L.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heaven-banish'd, in station stood, or just array,

Milton, P. L.

3. The supreme power; the sovereignty of heaven.

Now Heaven help him!

Shakespeare.

The will

And high permission of all-ruling Heaven

Left him at large.

Milton, P. L.

The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by Heaven.

Temple.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.

Take phisick, pomp;

Esoppe thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superfluous to them,

And show the heavens more just.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

As I can of those mysteries which heaven

Will not have earth to know.

Hemans! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!

How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow.

Dryden.

5. Elevation; sublimity.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heavens of invention.

Shakespeare.

6. It is often used in composition.

Than Lesbos fairer, and the Cretan shore.

Sir W. Jones, Ode.

HE'AVENLY.† adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuously, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly.

Sidney.

Not Moro's muse, who sung the mighty man a war;

Not Pindar's heavenly lyre, nor Horace when a poet.

Dryden.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.

Adorning first the genius of the place,

Then earth, the mother of the heavenly race.

Dryden.

HE'AVENLY.† adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,

Where heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,

And ever-musing melancholy dwells,

What means this tumult in a vestal's veins?

Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.

Truth and peace and love shall ever shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, to whose happy making sight alone,

Our heavenly guided soul shall climb.

Milton, Ode on Time.

HEAVENLY-MINDEDNESS.† n. s. A state of mind abstracted from the world, and directed to heaven.

The danger of being all soul, all botanics, all heavenly-mindedness so early, is a sad frightful thing for a young courtier.

Hammond, Works, i. 515.
With how much more difficulty may we imagine a man to get humility, or heavenly-mindedness, while all the appetites, and the very nerves of his soul strive against it, and endeavour to pull down as fast as he can build up. South, Sermon, vi. 54.

HEAVEN-SALUTING.* adj. Touching the sky; heaven-kissing.

What shall they do,
When stubborn rocks shall bow,
And hills hang down their heaven-saluting heads.

HEAVENWARD.* adv. (Heaven and peap, Saxon.) Towards heaven.

Out of the west coast, a venche as mo thought Came walking in the way; to heavenward she looked;
Mercy hight that mayde. Via, of a Houghman.
I prostrate lay.

By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mortal look Heavenward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke.

HEAVEN-WARRING.* adj. Warring against heaven.

None among the choices and prime
Of those heaven-warring champions could be found
So hardy, as to proffer or accept Alone the dreadful voyage. Milton, P. L.

That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heaving; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shaks. W. Tale.

2. A swell.

Of all objects that I have ever seen, there is none which affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean. I cannot see the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Arbutnot, Spect. No. 489.

HE'AVISOME.* adj. [from heave.] Dark; dull; drowsy. Craven Dialect.

HE'AVY.* adj. [heavt, Saxon, from heapan, to heave; whence the usage, in some counties, of heft for weight.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the centre; contrary to light.

Menenius tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Watts.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lie bold not to be washed out by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

To HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hected out of it. Gay, of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hected by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hecting his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

To HECTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only showing their teeth, others ranting and hecting, others scolding and reviling. Striding, Spect.

One would think the hecting, the storming the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spectator.

Duo Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HECTORLY.* adj. [from hector.] Blustering; insolent; outrageous.

Those, who seek glory from evil things, (who glory in their shame,) from presumption, the grandson of God's law, hectorly profaneness, and debauchery, from outrageous violence, from over-reaching craft, are not only valuingious, but impudent. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 31.

HE'DERACEOUS.* adj. [hederaceus, Latin.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE.* n. s. [hegge, Saxon; and so our own word is written hegge by Wicliffe and Chaucer, from hegan, to enclose.]

A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good word for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stables. Mortimer.

The gardeners unfold variety of colour to the eye every morning, and the hedgers' breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant mass
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first show; the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vire can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE.† v. a. [Saxon, hegan.]

1. To enclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclesi. xxviii. 24.

Those alleles must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge off thy way with thorns. Hos. ii. 6.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedge'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, will secure
And confident from foreign purposes.

Shakespeare, J. John.
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported to ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. To hedge seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge. You target yourself.

To hedge me in. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

When I was hasty, those delay'd me longer:

I pray thee, let me hedge one moment more.

Into thy promise: for thy life I press'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own.

Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

To hedge. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, and vain to shuffle, am to hedge, and to lurk. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth: meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,

Dash but usurp the sacred name of knight,

And should, if I were worthy, be to judge.

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain.

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

Shakespeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. s. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. s. [hedge and hog; erinae.] 1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my laurest way, and mount

Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Woe have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according to his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under-part, head, belly, and legs, within his thickest of prickles.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

— I grant ye.

— Dost grant me, hedge-hog? Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish; orbis echinatus. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. s. [hedge and hyssop.]

A species of willow-wort; gratiola.

Hill, Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. s. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. s. A plant; galopsis. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. s. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-note for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant riddles. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG. n. s. [hedge and pig.] A young

hedge-hog.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd,

Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

HEDGE-ROW. n. s. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseem

By hedge-row elms, on billocks green. Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-row of myrtle. Barclay to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. s. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinched from a sparrow that builds in the bush.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,

That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-BILL. n. s. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Daemtas with a hedge-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HEDGE-DOER. n. s. [hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ear

In his loose traces from the furrow came,

And the swick'd hedge at his supper sat. Milton, Comus.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedge at past fifty. Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [heban, Sax.] To mind;

to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;

But wonders much at those new vocal noods. Dryden.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed

all the parts of it.

To HEED. v. n. To mind; to consider.

Thoughtless she leaves and the dusty way

Her eyes, to ripen in the genial ray;

Nor heeds, that some fell crush, who thins for blood,

Or the rude foot, may crush the future bread. Warren, Paraphr. of Job, ch. 59.

HEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With woeen heed and giddy cunning.

The melting voice through mazes running.

Milton, L'Al.

Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads.

Thus must take heed, my Portius; Locke.

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another;

therefore, let men take heed of their company.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot

by night:

Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning;

and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did heed of us, and the first he view'd,

He did it with a serious mind; a heed. Shakespeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no

heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HEEDFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;

For I minor eyes will rivet on his face;

And, after, we will loath our judgements join,

In censure of his seeming. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing; with of.

I am commanded

To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;

Where fume, late entering at his heedful ears,

Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakespeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,

Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.

Thou heedful of advice, secure proceed;

My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HEEDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

That worthy divide did not heedfully observe the great difference betwixt these instanced degrees. Dp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 3.

I would wish parents to mark heedfully the virtues of their children. Watson on Education.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HEEDFULNESS. n. s. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HEEDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly.

HEEDINESS. n. s. Caution; vigilance.

And evermore that craven coward knight

Was at his back with heartless heediness;

Waiting if he swears him murder might. Spenser, F. Q. vi. li. 26.

HEEDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent;

inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving; with of.

The heedless lover does not know

Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Walker.

Heedless of woe, and hopeless of the crown,

Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.

Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.

Surprises are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence. Burckell.

HEEDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Post not heedlessly on the now nuda of folly, or precipice of perdition. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 30.

Our women run on so heedlessly in the fashion, that though it is the interest of some to hide as much of their faces as possible, yet because a leading coat appeared with a backward head-dress, the rest shall follow the mode, without observing that the author of the fashion assumed it because it could become no one but herself.

Tatler, No. 212.

HEEDLESSNESS. n. s. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitted, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness.

Locke.

HEEL† n. s. [Sax. hel. hele: Su. Goth. hael, from hællan, to sustain.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the lusted bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone.

Wicam, Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals. The stag recoils his strength, his speed, His winged heels, and then his armed heel; With these 't avoid, with that his fate to meet; But four prevails, and bids him trust his feet.

Deham.

Pegasus appeared lancing off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel.

Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight. Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tigers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for it.

L'Estreng.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth? — Upon the heels of my prevention.

Shakespeare, Timon.

But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toss off our ale till we cannot stand, And heigh-ho for the honour of old England.

Dryden.

HEIGHT† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers it as derived from high; and Milton wrote it hight. It is the Sax. substantive hebe, hih, and the Goth. hauhi. Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it to be heape, the third person singular of the indicative heapan, to lift up.]

1. Elevation above the ground; indefinite.

Into what pit thou seest,

From what height fallen.

Milton, P. L.

An amphitheatre's amazing height

Here fills the eye with terror and delight.

Addison.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upwards.

Abroad I'll study thee,

As he removes far off, that great heights takes.

Dante.

There is in Titivim a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty.

Bacon.

An amphitheatre appear'd, Rain'd it degrees, to sixty paces rear'd; That when a man was plac'd in one degree, Height was allow'd for him shure to see.

Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole. Guinea lies to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South.

Abbot, Discov. of the World.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence; high place.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;

His daughter's husband in the plain descends.

Dryden, An.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,

From that contented lap which I enjoy'd.

Shakspeare.

Addison.

To HEIGH-TEN† v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise high; to elevate.

Being so brighten'd,

His water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing to my friends; and, to side end,
He bow'd it his nature. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Heighen'd in their thoughts beyond
All doubt of victory. Milton, P. L.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

By the infusion of three drops out of one of his phials, he converted it into a most beautiful pale Burgundy. Two more of the same kind heightened it into a perfect Languedoc. Addison, Tatler, No. 151.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations. See HEIGHENING.

HEIGHENING.* n. s. [from heighen.] Improvement by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

All these amazing incidents do these inspired historians relate nakedly and plainly, without any of the colourings and heightenings of rhetoric. West on the Resurrection, p. 356.

HEINOUS. adj. [haineux, Fr. from hain, hate; or from the Teut. hōon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HEINOUSLY.† adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

If the act be so heinously flagitious, and rebounding to so high dishonour of God.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience. Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can tract offences, provoking God, as Jews and Israelites, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR.† n. s. [heire, old Fr.; heres, Latin; derived by some from hereto, to be close to, q. d. to be next to; by others from herus, lord or master, the heir being such when in possession of the inheritance.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Luttrell.

What lady is that?
—The heir of Alston, Rosaline her name. Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To buy my master's heir in true descent.

God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.
The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate. Swift.

3. Heir Apparent. He, who, if he survives, will certainly inherit, after the present possessor.

4. Heir Presumptive. One, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present state of things, be his heir; but whose succession or inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as that of a daughter, by the birth of a son; or that of a brother or nephew, by the birth of a child.

To Heir. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;
One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HEIRDOM.* n. s. [heir and dom.] The state or possession of an heir. Shakespeare.

Or if, O shame! in hired harlot's bed
Thy wealthy *heir*dom thou have buried;
Then, Pontice, little boots thee to discourse
Of a long line of golden ancestors. Bp. Hall, Ser. iv. 5.

HEIRRESS. n. s. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heirress she, while yet alive;
All that was hers to him did give. Wallar.

Knezes, though he married the *heir*ess of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HEIRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shakespeare.

HEIRLOOM.† n. s. [heir and looma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or movable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Those principles of obedience and patience, which our Saviour left to his apostles, and they like heirlooms to their successors.

Proceedings against Cornet, &c. (1516) Y. y. 3. Achilles' sceptre was of wood, Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HEIRSHIP. n. s. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe, Parergon.

HELD. The preterite and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclesi.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had succeeded his design. Dryden.

To HELE.* v. a. [Sax. helan; Su. hela, and Icel. hæla; to cover. The word was formerly written also hill, hell, and head.] To hide; to conceal; to cover. It is yet used in some parts of England. See HELL, and To HILL.

There may no man's privities
Be held halve so well as myn. Cover, Conf. Am. B. 2.

We women cannot nothing hel.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Else would the waters overflow the lands,
And fire devour the air, and hell them quight. Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 35.

To hel the fire; to hel a house; to hel a person in bed; i. e. to cover them.

Ray, South Country Words.

HE'LER.* See HELLIER.

HELLIACAL.† adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος, Gr.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.

The exact light and magnitude of the stars; their heliacal, acronical, matutine, and repertine motions. Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 227.

The heliacal rising of the star Sothis. Cowley, Pail. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

HELLIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.] From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their calendar days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he rises acronically. Dryden.

HELLICAL. adj. [helic, Fr. from ἥλιος, Gr.] Spiral; with many circumsolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helic revolution about a cylinder, receding its motion not from any stroke, but from a vertex at one end of it. Wallar.

HE'LING.* n. s. [from To HE'LE.] The covering of the roof of a building. See HILLING.

HE'LIOD. Parabola, in mathematics, or the parabolic spiral, is a curve which rises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOCENTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr.; ἥλιος, and κέντρον.] The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HELIO-METER.* n. s. [ἥλιος, the sun, and μέτρον, a measure; heliometer, Fr.] An instrument for measuring the diameters of the sun and moon.

HELIOSCOPE. n. s. [helioscope, Fr.; ἥλιος, and σκοπεῖν.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HELIOTROPE.† n. s. [ἥλιος, and τρίψω; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.]

1. A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turnsol or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night and in cloudy weather. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A precious stone, of a green colour, streaked with red veins.

They sell — agates, turquoises, heliotropes, cornelians. Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 44.

HE'LIOSPHERICAL.† adj. [helic and sphere.] The heliospherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called, because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.

They are helipheral lines, as they call them, that is, partly circular, and partly helical or spiral. Gregory, Pastors. (1655), p. 285.

HEL-LINE. n. s. [Helice, Fr.; ἥλις.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL-† n. s. [Goth. halje, from huljan, to cover; Germ. hella; Sax. helle. "Some derive it from the Hebrew word hell; either subtracting the first letter, or including it in the aspiration. — But the derivation given by Verstegan is the most probable; from being helled over, that is to say, hidden or covered. For in the German tongue (from whence our English was extracted) hell signifieth to hide; and huljan, in Offridus Wissemburgensis, is hiden. And in this country, [Ireland] with them that retain the ancient language, which their forefathers brought with them out of England, to hell the head, is as much as to cover the head; and he that covereth the house with tile or slate, is from thence commonly called a hellier. So that, in the original propriety of the word, our hell doth exactly answer to the Greek ἥλις, which denoteth the ἀπὸ γῆς, the place which is unseen, or removed from the sight of man." Abp. Usher's Answ. to the Jesuit Malone in Ireland, 4th edit. p. 219.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell
That summoneth thee to heaven, or to hell.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.
If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Let none admire

That richer grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious name. Milton, P. L.
Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down into hell.
Gen. xxxvii. 35. (Dow. and Anst. Tr. 1609. &c.)
He descended into hell. Apostle's Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snarers of death overtook me. Psal. xlviii. 4.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;
They of both ends are caught to do thy;
The two that in mid-play, hell called were;
Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eyes,
To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shears.

This trusty squire, he had, as well
As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden guard, but true gold lace. Hudibras.
In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
Who might deserve a place in his own hell. King, Cookery.

6. Formerly, a dungeon in a prison.

In Wood-street's hole, or Poultry's hell.
The Country-man, 1658.

7. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,
White Saul and hell cross his strong fate in vain. Cowley.

8. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head,
In hell-black night could'st, would have hell'd up,
And quenched the stelled fires. Shaksp. A. Lear.

HELL-BORN. adj. [hell and born.] Born in hell.

Like the hell-born hydra.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. xl. 32.

Learn by proof,
Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of heaven.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfolded smoke and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast thrice forth unto the skies.

HELL-BREWED. adj. [hell and brew.] Prepared or brewed in hell.

Hence with thy hell-brew'd opiate.
Milton, Comus, ver. 696. (M.S. reading.)

HELL-BROTHER. n. s. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owlet's wing;
For a charm of pow'ful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shaksp. Macb.

HELL-CAT. n. s. [hell and cat.] Formerly, a witch; a hag.

The wharfen old hell-cat would have given me
the brayne of a cat once — I had her make sawe with't.
Mistleton's Witch.

HELL-CONFOUNDING. adj. [hell and confound.] Vanquishing the power of hell.

With that he from his holy bosom drew
A golden banner, in whose silken lap
His Lord's almighty name wide open flew,
Of hell-confounding majesty made up;
The fiend no sooner Jesus there did read,
But shame pull'd down his eyes, and fear his head. Beaumont, Psyche, p. 20.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn.

Where I reign king. Milton, P. L.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide, and ate him quick.
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Shakspere.

HELL-HAG. n. s. [hell and hag.] A hag of hell.

A corroding disease it [envy] is; an hell-hag that feeds upon its own marrow, bones, and strongest parts. Dip. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 261.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shaksp.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Unwood clod's me in the bleeding bark,
And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryden.

HELL-HOUND. n. s. [hell-hubb, Saxon.] 1. Dog of hell.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death. Shaks.
Now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and fast'ning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd
My hell-hounds to lick up the draft, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton, P. L.

3. A profligate person.

Gods keep me from these hell-hounds.
Beaumont and Fl. Philaut.

HELL-KITE. n. s. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? Oh kites! all? Oh hell-kite! all? What all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakspere, Macbeth.

HELLEBORÉ. n. s. [helleborus, Lat.] Christmas flower.

HELLEBORÉ. White. n. s. [veratrum, Lat.] A plant.

Drayton, Polyd. 8. 13.

HELLEBORISM. n. s. [from hellebore.] A medicinal preparation of hellebore.

In vain would the physician attempt, with all his medicines and helleborism, the cure of those that are sick of love, or any like passions.

Fernand, Love Melanch. (1640), p. 169.

HELLENICK. adj. [ἑλληνικός, Gr.] Grecian; heathen.

So great an injury they [the Christians] then held it to be deprived of hellenick learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining and secretly decaying the church, than the open cruelty of Decius or Dioclesian. Milton, Acronyction.

HELLENISM. n. s. [ἑλληνισμός, Gr.] A Greek idiom.

Virgil is full of the Greek forms of speech, which the critics call hellenisms. Addison, Spect. No. 285.

HELLENIST. n. s. [ἑλληνιστής, Gr.] 1. A Grecianizing Jew.

That the thing was done by the Jews, I deny not; but by these, I mean the Hellenists. Gregory, Pastors, p. 88.

Uncanonical pieces that had been annexed to it by the Hellenists. Cassin, Cass. of Script. p. 50.

2. Any one skilled in the Greek language.

Another thing observable of a with its allies; i.
when they come alone, without the implication of other companions, they are of an easy and graceful pronunciation. Hence seems to have loved them. —
But if it does not satisfy the critical Hellenist, then I must add, &c. Dalgarno, Dref and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 126.

HELLENISTICAL. adj. [from hellenist.] Relating to the language used among the Grecianizing Jews.

The importance of the hellenistical dialect, into which he had made the exactest search. Hammond's, 5. 1.

Hellenists and some other scrupulous critics reken this an hellenistical form of speech. Blackwell, Sacra. Class. ii. 157.

HELLENISTICALLY. adv. [from hellenistical.] According to the hellenistical dialect.

It may bear the same signification hellenistically
in this place. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 64.

HELMESMAN. n. s. [helm and man.] He who manages the rudder of a vessel.

HELMWIND. n. s. [helm and wind.] A particular kind of wind in some of the mountainous parts of England.

In these mountains [of Westmorland,] towards the north-east part of the county, is a very remarkable phenomenon, such as we have not found any account of elsewhere in the kingdom, except only about Yorkshire, and other places bordering upon the mountains of Inglesborough, Kettle, and Penigint, in the confines of the counties of York and Lancashire. It is called a helmwind. A rolling cloud, sometimes for three or four days together, hovers over the mountain tops, the sky being clear in other parts. When this cloud appears, the country people say, the helm is up: which is an Anglo-Saxon word signifying properly a covering for the head.—This helm is not dispersed or blown away by the wind, but continues in its station, although a violent roaring hurricane comes tumbling down the mountain, ready to tear up all before it. Then on a sudden ensues a profound calm. And then again alternately the tempest; which seldom extends into the country above a mile or two from the bottom of the mountain.

Burns & Nicholson, Hist. of Westm. & Cumb. i. 7.

HELOT. n. s. [Lat. Helotes, from Helos, a Laconian town, conquered by the Spartans, who made all the inhabitants prisoners of war, and reduced them into the condition of slaves. Potter, Archaeol. Gr. b. i. ch. 10.] A slave.

Nor was it lawful for any Spartan to improve this lot to the best, by living upon it; for they were strictly prohibited all occupations, even that of agriculture; and their birds or helots paid them only an annual quantity of corn, wine, and other fruits. Dip. Mren, Monarchy Ascert. p. 140.

To HELPE. v. a. preter. helped, or help; part. helped, or holpen. [hilpan, Gothic; helpan, Saxon.]

1. To assist; to support; to aid.

If he thus be helplessly distract,
'Tis requisite his office be resign'd.

Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

HEL'PLESSNESS, n. s. [from helpless.]

Want of ability; want of succour.

It was an objection constantly urged by the ancient Epicureans, that man could not be the creature of a benevolent being, as he was formed in a state so helpless and infirm: Mootaigne took it and urged it also. They never considered or perceived that this very infirmity and helplessness were the cause and cement of society.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HEL'FMANE, n. s. [help and mate.]

A companion; an assistant; a partner.

HEL'TER, n. s. The northern pronunciation of halter. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Cumberland and Westmoreland Dialects. See also HELTER-SKELTER.

HELTER-SKELTER, adv. [as Skinner fancies, from heolrepe creabo, the darkness of hell; hell, says he, being a place of confusion. Dr. Johnson.—Others, not less fancifully, from the Latin hilariter and celeriter, i. e. merrily and hastily. But Grose has given the following derivation. "Kelter or kiltter, is frame, order, condition, a northern word; hence helters-kelter, a corruption of halter, to hang, and kelter, order, i. e. hang order, or in defiance of order." Another Latin origin, hic aliter, has been proposed; and a Dutch etymology has also been thought of: but they are perhaps all "fancies, built on nothing firm." See Craven Dialect, and Brockett's North Country Words.] In a hurry; without order; tumultuously.

Sir John, I am thy friend, and thy friend;
And halter-kelter have I rode to England,
And tidings do I bring.

Shakespeare.

He had no sooner turned his back, but they were at it halter-kelter, throwing books at one another's heads.

1. Etranger.

All dominion ended with the day, and makes and females met halter-kelter.

Spect. No. 576.

HELVE, n. s. [helpe, Sax.; helve, Germ. perhaps from healban, to hold.] The handle of an axe.

His hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve.

Deut. xix. 5.

TO HELVE, v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with a helve or handle.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HEM, pron. [Sax. heom.] Them. We may be said to retain this old word, in our writing and speaking 'em for them; as, I have seen 'em this morning.

Such need perdy does all hem reason,
That of such falshers' friendship bane fine.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

HEM, n. s. [hem, Saxon.]

1. The edge of a garment doubled and sewed to keep the threads from spreading.

Rollers must be made of even cloth, white and gentle, without hem, seam, or thread hanging by.

Witman.

2. [Hemmen, Dutch.] The noise uttered by a sudden and violent expiration of the breath.

He loves to clear his pipes in good air, and is not a little pleased with any one who takes notice of the strength which he still exerts in his morning hem.

Addison.

3. Interject. Hem! [Lat.]

I would try if I could cry hem, and have him.

Shakespeare.

TO HEM, v. a.

1. To close the edge of cloth by a hem or double border sewed together.

The contature of this speech will perhaps be the less subject to ravel out, if I hem it with the speech of our learned and pious ancestor.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 302.

2. To border; to edge.

All the skirt about
Was hemmed with golden fringe.

Spenser, F. Q.

Along the shore of silver streaming Thames,
Whose rusky bank, the which his river *hem*s.

Spenser.

3. To enclose; to environ; to confine; to shut; perhaps always with a particle; as, in, about, round.

So of either side, stretching itself in a narrow length, was it hemmed in by woody hills, as if indeed nature had meant therein to make a place for beholders.

Sidney.

'Twas then as then the great Jerusalem
With valiant squadrons round about to hem it.

Fairfax.

Why, Neptune, hast thou made us stand alone,
Divided from the world as they say;
Hem'd 'tis to be a spoil to tyranny,
Leaving affliction hence no way to fly? Daniel.
I hurry me to haste away,
And find his honour in a pound,
Hem'd 'tis by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons, blue and green. Pope.

To Hem-t v. n. (hemmen, Dutch.) To utter a noise by violent expulsion of the breath.

She speaks much of her father; says, she hears There's tricks in the world; and hem, and beats her heart. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
He's dry, he hem!
Bacon, and Fl. W. at Sec. Weapons

HEMI, * A word often used in composition, signifying, like demi and semi, half; and is an abbreviation of the Greek ἡμι.

HEMIPYCN, n. s. [ἡμιπύκν, half, and πύκν, the skull, or head.] A pain that affects only one part of the head at a time. Quincy.

HEMICYCLE, † n. s. [ἡμικύκλος.] A half round.

Upon the right hand of her, but with some little descent, in a hemicycle was seated Erychia, or Quiet, the first handmaid of Peace.

B. Jonson, Port of the King's Enter.

HEMINA, n. s. An ancient measure:
now used in medicine to signify about two ounces in measure. Quincy.

HEMIPLEGY, n. s. [ἡμιπληγία, half, and πληγία, to strike or seize.] A palsy, or any nervous affection relating thereto, that seizes one side at a time; some partial disorder of the nervous system.

HEMISPHERE, n. s. [ἡμισφαῖρον; hemi- sphere, French.] The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.

That place in earth, the seat of man; that light
His day, which else, as the other hemisphere, Night would invade. Milton, P. L.

A hill

Of Paradise the highest, from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken
Stretch'd out to'th' utmost reach of prospect lay.
Milton, P. L.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemi- sphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Bacon.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;
So in this hemisphere our utmost view
Is only bound by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHERICAL, } adj. [from hemisphere.]
HEMISPHERICK, } Half round; containing half a globe.

The thin film of water swells above the surface of the water it swims on, and commonly constitutes hemispherical bodies with it. Boyle.
A pyrites, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherical figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup. Woodward on Fossils.

HEMISTICH, or HEMISTICHIC, † n. s.
[ἡμιστίχ; hemistichic, Fr. It is most correctly written hemistich, as distich.]
Half a verse.

He broke off in the hemistich, or midst of the verse; but, seized as it were with a divine fury, he made up the latter part of the hemistich.
Dryden, Dufrenoy.

The method of writing parallel hemistichs in opposite columns — may sometimes have caused a transposition of whole lines.

Alp. Newcome, Ess. Tr. of the Bib. p. 248.

HEMISTICHICAL, * adj. [from hemistich.]
Denoting a division of the verse.
The reader will observe the constant return of the hemistichical point, which I have been careful to preserve; — as I suspect, that it shows how these poems were sung to the harp by the minstrels.
Watson, Hist. E. P. Add. to Vol. i.

The hemistichical division is not exhibited to the eye in the printed page.

Rp. Horley, Tr. of Hecate, p. 43.

HEMLOCK, n. s. [hemleac, Saxon.] An herb.

The leaves are cut into many minute segments: the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped, and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channelled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious;
but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different. Miller.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with such famier and furrow-weeds,
With harden, hemlock. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

We cannot with certainty affirm, that on man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock. Locke.

HEMMEL, * n. s. [heim, German.] A hovel; a shed or covering for cattle:
a fold. A northern word. Grose and Brockett write it hemmel; in the Praise of Yorkshire Ale it is hemble.

HEMORRAGE, n. s. [ἡμorrhagia; hemor-
HEMORRHAGY,] ragie, French.] A violent flux of blood.

Great hemorrhage succeeds the separation. Bay.
Twenty days' lasting will not diminish its quantity so much as one great hemorrhage.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

HEMORRHOIDS, n. s. [ἡμorrhoides; he- morroids, French.] The piles; the enoids.

I got the hemorrhoids. Swift.

HEMORRHOIDAL, adj. [hemorrhoidal, Fr. from hemorrhoides.] Belonging to the veins in the fundament.

Besides, there are hemorrhages from the nose and hemorrhoidal veins, and fluxes of rheum.

Embout upon the field, a battle blood
Of leeches, spouting hemorrhoidal blood. Garth.

HEMP, † n. s. [hænep, Saxon; hamp, Sa.
Goth.; hamp, Danish; hamp, Dutch;
cannabis.] A fibrous plant of which course liuen and ropes are made.

It hath digitated leaves opposite to one another: the flowers have no visible petals; it is male and female in different plants. Its bark is useful for cordage and cloth. Miller.

Hemp-seeds are used in medicine on many occasions. Chambers.

Let galleys go for dog; let man go free.
And let not keep his windy pipe vociferate. Shaksp.

Hemp and flax are commodities that deserve encouragement, both for their usefulness and profit.
Mortimer.

HEMP Agrimony, n. s. A plant.

The common hemp agrimony is found wild by ditches and sides of rivers. Miller.

HEMPEN, adj. [from hemp.] Made of
hemp.

In foul reproach of knighthood's fair degree,
About his neck a hempen rope he wears.

Spenser, F. Q.

Behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing. Shakespeare.

Ye shall have a hempen cundle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare.

I watch'd his dangling garter from his knee;
He wist not when the hempen string I tug. Ging.

HEMPEN, † adj. [from hemp.] Rescumbent
hemp.

'Tis't the rind and the tree there is a cotton, or hempy kind of moss. Hewitt, Lett. ii. 55.

HEN, † n. s. [henne, Saxon and Dutch;
han, German, a cock. Dr. Johnson —
lecl. hœna, gallina. Vox antiquissima.
Serenius]

1. The female of a house-cock.
Dame Parlet was the sovereign of his heart —
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey.

Dryden, Cock and Fox.

2. The female of any land-fowl.

The peacock, pheasant, and goldcock cocks have glorious colours; the hens have not. Bacon.

Whilst the hen bird is covering her eggs,
the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means directs her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

O'er the trackless waste
The heath hen flutters. Thomson.

HEN-COOP, * n. s. [hen and coop.] A cage in which poultry are kept.

HEN-DRIVER, n. s. [hen and driver.] A kind of hawk.

The hen-driver I forbear to name. Watson.

HEN-HARM, n. s. A kind of kite.

HEN-HAIRIER,] Ainworth. So called probably from destroying chickens.

Pygmyrus.

HEN-HEARTED, † adj. [hen and heart.]
Dartingly; cowardly; like a hen. A low word.

One puling hen-hearted rogue is sometimes the ruin of a set. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 110.

HEN-HOUSE, * n. s. [hen and house.] A place for sheltering poultry.

HEN-PECKED, adj. [hen and pecked.] Governed by the wife.

A steplame too I have, a cursed she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dryden.

The neighbours reported that he was hen-pecked, which was impossible, by such a mild-spiced woman as his wife. Arbutnot.

HEN-ROOST, n. s. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry roost.

Many a poor devil stands to a whipping-post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost. L'Estrengne.

Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourages to rob his hen- roosts. Swift.

If a man prosecutes gipsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. Addison.

They oft have sally'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Tickell.

HEPHERNE, n. s. [hyoscyamus, Lat.] A plant.

It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills.
This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.

That to which old Socrates was cur'd,
Or heban juice, to swell 'em till they burst. Dryden.

HEPHERNE, n. s. [Alaine foliis hederacis.]
A plant.

In a scarcity in Sicily a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small hawk.

HENCE. v. adv. or interj. [henan, SAXON; hennet, old English; hin, German; hinc, Latin.]

1. From this place to another.

Discharge my follow's; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.

The Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence.

A sudden presence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here; hence with your little ones.

Hence with decal vain, and coy excuse.

3. At a distance; in other places. Not in use.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are inwined to this action.

4. From this time; in the future.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace.

He who can reason well about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may.

Let not posterity a thousand years hence look
For truth in the voluminous annals of princes.

5. For this reason; In consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear
Of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment Tends to purification; hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion.

7. From this source; from this original;
from this store.

My Flora was my sun; for as
One sun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrow'd hence.

Their light and grace, as stars do thence.

8. From hence is a vicious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten.

Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Belord on Latian shores a foreign prince!

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.]
To send off; to dispatch to a distance.

Obsolete.

Go, having cur! thy hungry maw go fill
(O you foul bug, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curst.

HENCEFORTH. adv. [henonforth, SAXON.]
From this time forward.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be carls.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier cannot not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess.

I over from thy side henceforth will stray,
Till day droop.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come?

HENCEFORTHWARD. adv. [hence and forth-ward.] From this time to futurity.

Upon my target three fair shining suns.
Pardon, I beseech you;

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endued with good qualities.

HE'NCIEMAN. n. s. [hjne, or hne, SAX.
a servant, and man, Skinner; hengst, Teut. a horse, and man, Spielman. SAX. henjert, a horse. And the primary usage of hencman is in the sense of a horseman. Our old poets often use hencbroy also for an attendant, and we have now horseboy. Mr. Archdeacon Nares and another literary friend, however, prefer the simple etymology of Judge Blackstone, in a note on Dr.
Percy's Northumberland Household
Book, viz. haunchman, from following the haunch of his master.] A page;
an attendant. Obsolete.

Every knight had after him riding
Three henchmen (each) on him awaiting.

Why should Titian cross her Obeon?
I do but buy a little changeling boy.

Three henchmen were for every knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind.

HEND. n. [probably from the SAX.
HENDY.] hean, humble. Both words are used by Chaucer; but they have long been obsolete.] Gentle. Bullokar.

Sire, ye shall ben hende
And curteis, as a man of your estate;
In compaignie we will have no debat.

This clerk was clipped hende Nicholas.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

To HEND. v. a. [henban, SAXON, from hendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hond, Teutonic.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.

With that the sergeants hent the young man about,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering.

HENDECAGON. n. s. [ἑνδεκα and γωνία.]
A figure of eleven sides or angles.

HENDECASYLLABLE. n. s. [ἑνδεκα and σῶλλατος, Gr.] A metrical line consisting of eleven syllables.

A living author, that must be nameless, has written the following hendecasyllables:
O dulcis puer, O venuste Marce, &c.

HENDIADIS. n. s. [ἑνδεκα, Gr.] A rhendiadic figure, when two noun sub-stantives are used instead of a substantive and adjective.

HENS-FRET. n. s. [fumarie sepium.]
Hedge fumitory.

To HENT. v. a. [SAX. hentan; Su. Goth.
haenta; from hand.] To catch; to lay hold of. See To HEND. Bullokar.

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stile-a. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

HERP. n. s. [SAX. herp.] The fruit of the wild-brier, or dog-rose; commonly written hip. See Hir.

In hard winters there is observed great plenty of herps and herps, which preserve the small birds from starving.

HERPATIC. adj. [herpaticus, Latin;
herpaticus, French, from ἑρπας.] Belonging to the liver.

If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it's herpatic.

The cystic gall is thick, and intensely bitter;
the hepatic gall is more fluid, and not so bitter.

HERPES. n. s. [SAX. herp.] Neat; decent; comfortable. A northern word.
Grose, and Craven Dialect.

HERPACAPSA. n. s. [herpaca and capsula.]
Having seven cavities or cells.

HERPACHORD. n. s. [herpachord, Fr. herp, Gr. seven, and χορδή, a chord.] Anciently, a musical instrument of seven strings; as, the lyre; and also a poetical composition played or sung on seven different notes or sounds.

HERPTAGON. n. s. [herptagon, French;
herp and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTAGONAL. adj. [from heptagon.]
Having seven angles or sides.

In a circle describe an heptagonal and equilateral figure. Selden on Drayton's Polyoth. S. 11.

HEPTAMERIDE. n. s. [heptameride, Fr.
hepta, Gr. seven, and μερίς, a portion.]
That which divides into seven parts.

The heptameride of M. Sauvcur could express an interval so small as the seventh part of what is called a comma, the smallest interval that is admitted in modern music.

A Smith on the Imitative Arts.

HEPTARCHIC. adj. [heptarchique, Fr.
from heptarchy.] Denoting a sevenfold government.

The Saxons practised this mode of division for fixing the several extents of their heptarchic empire. Warren, Hist. of Kiddington. p. 69.

HEPTARCHIST. n. s. [from heptarchy.]
He who rules one of the divisions of a sevenfold government.

In 750, the Saxon heptarchy, Cuthred and Eilthred, fought a desperate battle at Borsford, or Burford. Warren, Hist. of Kiddington. p. 48.

HEPTARCHY. n. s. [heptarchie, French;
hepta and αρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little note of arms, altho' the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields.

Engelund began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shad'd the heptarchy of power,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent.

Hyden.

HE'PTATEUCH.* n. s. [heptateuchus, Fr. twiâ, Gr. seven, and teuch, a work, a book.] A term applied to the first seven books of the Old Testament.

HEIL. pron. [heja, hej, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

    About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, dimble in throats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shaks. As you like it.
Still new favourites she chose,
Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Conolly.

    One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sovereign power;
Wonderous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were useless. Conolly.

    And so Susanna took her place. Conolly.

2. The oblique case of she.

    England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her name. Shakspeare, Hen. F.
She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Conolly.

    The moon o'er clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again. Conolly.

    Should I be left, and thou be lost, we see
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HER's. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before as, such are her charms, such charms are her's.

    This pride of her's,
Upon action, hath drawn my love from her. Shakspeare.

    Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not her's confess. Conolly.

    Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, her's could mend. Dryden.

    I bred you up in arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not her's, but yours. Dryden.

HE'RALD. n. s. [herault, Fr.; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust enigmatical, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

    May none, whose scatter'd names honour my blood,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And if a poet here, no herald run. H. Jonson.

    When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

    Embassador of peace, if peace you chase;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

    Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinging.

    It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

    It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shaks.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

    After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions;
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shaks.

To HE'RALD. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as by an herald. A word not used.

    We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee. Shakspeare.

HE'RBALIST.* n. s. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

    What every herbalist almost, and physician, hath written. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 551.

    Other plants, and trees, and herbs, and flowers, should constantly partake of the like decay;—
which our best physicians and herbalists have not yet found to be so. Hobbes on Providence, p. 145.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HE'RBAR. n. s. [A word I believe only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

    The roof herod was arch'd overhead,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintly. Spenser, F. Q.

HE'RBARIST. n. s. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

    He was too much sway'd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours or multiplicity of leaves in the flower were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray on the Creation.

    As to the fuel, their seed hath been discovered and shew'd me first by an ingenious herbarist. Darwin.

To HE'RBARIZE.* v. n. [Fr. herboriser; from herb.] To go about gathering medicinal herbs.

    The apothecaries' company very seldom miss coming to Hampstead every spring, and here have their herborizing feast; and I have heard them often say, that they have found a greater variety of curious and useful plants near and about Hampstead than in any other place. Swaine, Analysis of Hampstead Water, (1734,) p. 27.

HE'RBARY.* n. s. [Lat. herbarium.] Our old word is herbere, or erbere. A garden of herbs.

His slumbers short, his bed the herbless ground.
Alc. and Alcibiades, P. ii.
 Near some rugged herbless rock,
 Where no shepherd keeps his flock.

Jos. Walton, Ode to Solitude.

HERBORIST.* n. s. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HERBORIZATION.* n. s. [French; from herboriser.] The appearance of plants in fossils.

Mr. Daubenton gives an account of three different kinds of herborizations. The first, amongst which are those found on agate, are owing to parts of real plants. — The second sort are owing to the steele containing particles of iron, which are so disposed as to present ramifications, &c.
Maly, Acc. of Hist. of N. Acad. of Sciences at Paris.

HERBOUR.* See HERBOUR.

HERBOURLESS.* See HERBOURLESS.

HERBOURGH.* n. s. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written herbour.

Herculean Samson, from the harlot lap
 Of Philistine Dalilah. Milton, P. L.

2. Beating Hercules; large; massive.

He is about to repeat the blow with an huge, herculean club. Drummond, Truce, p. 51.

HERD,† n. s. [heopd, hepb, Sax.; hiord, Goth. from hyrda, to keep. Serenius. So Mr. H. Tooke deduces the Saxon word from the verb hyrban, to keep. Some French etymologists, noticing their old word herde, conceive it to be from the Lat. hærcere, to be close together.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black cattle. Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Of race of youthful and unbandied colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare.

To make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock. Nam. xv. 3.
 There find a herd of hivers wandering o'er
 The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.
Addison.

2. A company of men in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
 Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.
 I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truths by the herd. Locke.

3. Not always in contempt and detestation, as the preceding definition of Dr. Johnson insinuates.

The impartial gods, who from the mounted heavens
 View as their mortal herd, behold who err,
 And in their time chastise. Newton, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

4. It anciently signified a keeper of cattle, and in the north of England it is still used. [hyph, Saxon.] A sense still retained also in composition: as, goatherd.

From thence into the open fields he fled,
 Whereas the herds were keeping of their feed. Spenser, F. Q. vi. li. 4.

Ne was there herd, ne was there shepherd's awayne, Ibid. st. 10.
 But her herd homur.

To HERD, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.
 Weak women should, in daoger, herd like deer. Dryden.

 Heat with the glorious sun's all purging ray. Brownie, Rich. Post.

HERDROOM.* n. s. [herd and groom.] A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wagger won or lost?
 That shall your herdroom, and none other. Spenser.

HERDMAN,† n. s. [herd and man.] Sax. HERDMAN (herdman) n. [herdman,] One employed in tending herds; formerly an owner of herds.

A herdman rich, of much account was he,
 In whom no civil did reign, or good appear'd to be.
 The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa. Amos, l. 1.

And you, enchantment,
 Worthy enough a herdman, if e'er thou
 These rural latches to his entrance open,
 I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Scarce themselves know how to hold
 A sheep, or, or have learn'd ought else the least
 That to the faithful herdman's art belongs. Milton, Lycidas.

There oft the Indian herdman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and teeds his pasturing herds
 At loop-holes cut through thicket shade. Milton, P. L.

So stands a Thracian herdman with his spear
 Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdman, round
 The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden, Virg. Georg.
 When their herdman could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HERE,† adv. [hep, Saxon; hier, Dutch; her, Icel. and Goth.]

1. In this place.
 Before thy here approach,
 Old Sward, with an thousand warlike men,
 All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I, upon my frontiers here,
 Keep residence. Milton, P. L.

Here Nature first begins
 Her furthest verge. Milton, P. L.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
 While he his second misery suffers here! Covley.
 To-day is ours, we have it here. Covley.

2. In the present state.
 Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy
hereafter. Bacon, Advice to Filippi.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.
 Thus here's for earnest: Dryden.

'Tis fish'd here.
 In drinking a health. Covley.

Here's to thee, Dick.
 However, friend, here's to the king, one criss;
 To him who was the king, the friend replies. Prins.

5. It is often applied to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night: mine eyes do itch;
 Doth that bode weeping? Bacon.
 'Tis neither here nor there. Shakespeare, Othello.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee follow;
 To see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee
there. Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;
 Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-hair and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and proper in the shade; and these to be to the health here and there, not in order. Gos. of the Tongue.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single prowl, to the ruin of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continual streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spent, Scen.

He that rides past through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanna in another.
Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
 Thou lovest here, a letter where to find. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HEREABOUT.* adv. [here and about.]
 About this place.

For all that came, I'll hide him hereabout.
 His looks I fear, and his intent I doubt. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.]
 About this place.

I saw heretics nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increased, de parts
From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt.

Milton, P. L.

And bring his Trojans peace.

Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon.

HERET'FER. adv. n. s. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the examples from Addison's Cato, and from Prior. Yet it is finely employed in prose.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis Heaven itself that points out an heretic;

And intimates eternity to man.

Addison, Cato.

He supercedes every little prospect of gain and advantage which offers itself here, if he does not find it consistent with his views of an heretic.

Addison, Spect. No. 225.

The mind that is habituated to the lively sense of an heretic, can hope for what is the most terrifying to the generality of mankind, and rejoice in what is the most afflicting.

Taylor, No. 156.

I shall still wait

Some new heretic, and a future state.

Prior.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his dominion, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean?

Hooker.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is to heresy either one way or other determined.

Hooker.

Herety the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours.

Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment; heresy we become acquainted with the nature of things.

Watts.

HERET'FER. adv. [heres, Lat.] That may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's.

Locke.

HERET'FER. adv. n. s. [hereditum, Lat.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

Hereditatem, says Sir Edward Coke, includes not only lands and tenements, but whatsoever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed.

Blackstone.

HERET'FER. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

In this kingdom such were hereditarily honoured with it.

Selden on Drapers' Purp. S. 11.

Titular respects, which those who are really and hereditarily possessed of, can wield without any such taint or suspicion of transportation.

Pope, Heli. Rom. p. 220.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily.

Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARY. adv. [hereditare, Fr.; hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever.

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom.

Shakespeare.

These old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary.

Shaks.

The throne hereditary, and bound his reign

With verd's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend

Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,

Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes

Beholds his own hereditary skies.

Dryden, Ovid.

When heretic verse his youth shall raise,

And form it to hereditary praise.

Dryden, Virg.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and in.] In this.

In how highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us.

Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done heresy.

Shakespeare.

Since truth, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgement is resolved into a precedent default in the will.

South.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance heresy cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general.

Hooker.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant.

Shakespeare.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,

Herout up to the throne of God did fly.

Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except heretofore, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

Shakespeare.

HERET'FER. adv. n. s. See EREMITA. A hermit.

Heremites, and other votaries, professing only devotion.

Pope, Heli. Select Thoughts, § 5.

HERMETICAL. adv. [It should be written heremitical, from heremite, of ἡρεμις, a desert; heremitique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient ascetics could go beyond you for a cave in a rock.

Pope.

HERET'FER. adv. [heresiarche, French; αἱρεσιάρχης, and ἡρεσιάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

Whope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresiarch.

Shakespeare.

HERET'FER. adv. n. s. [from heresiarch.] Principal heresy.

The book itself [the Alcoran] consists of heresiarchies against our Blessed Saviour.

Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 323.

HERET'FER. adv. [heresie, French; hæresis, Latin; αἵρεσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Heresy prevails only by a counterfeit show of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest reconstruence clearly true, and unable to be without.

Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states.

Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgement, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissolubility.

King Charles.

HERETICK. n. s. [heretique, French; αἱρετικός.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretic or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries.

Bacon.

No heretics desire to spread

Their wild opinions like those Epicures.

Davies.

Bellarmin avows, that he has quoted a heretic instead of a father.

Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word heretics, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors.

Watts, Logic.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold

Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,

In him that was of late an heretic,

As firm as faith.

Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adv. [from heretic.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible, even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same?

Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning.

Deacy of Picty.

HERETICAL. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERET'FER. adv. n. s. [Sax. heperetoga, from hepe, an army, and eton, to lead.] A general; a leader of an army. Obsolete.

In the time of our Saxon ancestors, as appears from Edward the Confessor's laws, the military force of this kingdom was in the hands of the dukes or heretics.

Blackstone.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and to.] To this; ad to this.

HERET'FER. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love your person.

Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person.

South.

We now can form no more

Long schemes of life, as heretofore.

Swift.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider what sort the heart of man heretofore is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that wisdom assesteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are.

Hooker.

Agreeable heretics might not be anxious to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know.

Locke.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and upon.] Upon this.

The melancholy silence that follows heretofore — raises in the spectators a grief that is inexpressible.

Taylor, No. 135.

HERET'FER. adv. [here and with.] With this.

HERMAPHRODITIC. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

[These ladies] cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain of fashion, with most masculine, or rather hermaproditic, authority.

B. Jonson, Episcure.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaproditic principles, that contain the radicality of different forms.

Brown.

There is another kind of occasional dress in use among the ladies. I mean the riding habit, which some have not injudiciously called the hermaproditic, by reason of its masculine and feminine composition.

Guardian, No. 146.

HERMAPHRODITICALLY. adv. [from hermaphrodite.] After the manner of both sexes.

Unite not the vices of both sexes in one; be not monstrous in iniquity, nor hermaproditically vicious.

Brown, Chr. Mor. l. 51.

HERMAPHRODITIC. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

Look on me, and with all thine eyes,
Male, female, yea hermaproditic eyes.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermes, HERMETICK.] or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

Their seals, their characters, hermetick rings,
Their gem of riches, and bright stone that brings invisibility.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together.

Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymical art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there.

Beaumont.

HERMIT. n. s. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, eremite.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wretched hermit, forecure winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shelton.
You say this command unto me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

He had been duke of Savoy, and after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Add. on Italy.

2. A bandsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities he's up'd to them,
We rest your hermits. Shakspeare.

HERMITAGE. n. s. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass
Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby.

Spenser, F. Q.

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

Shakspeare.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The livery gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. M. H. Penn.
About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage; it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks.

Addison on Italy.

HERMITAGE. n. s. A French wine.

By the infusion of three drops out of one of his phials, he converted it into a most beautiful pale Burgundy. Two more of the same kind he added it into a perfect Langue; from thence it passed into a flord Hermitage.

Addison, Taitler, No. 131.

HERMITARY. n. s. [from hermit.] A religious cell, annexed to some abbey. This is sometimes written hermitage.

HERMITESSE. n. s. [from hermit.] Written hermitesse, by Drummmond; from the Fr. hermitesse, Cotgrave and Sherwood.] A woman retired to devotion.

Here she stay'd; among these pines,
Sweet hermitesse, she did alone repair.

Beaumont, Sonnets.

The violet is truly the hermites of flowers, affecting woods and forests.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

You would have me resolve the hermitical and austere character into a timid, gloomy, and phlegmatic one. Cowley, Poet. to Hyde, Court. 1.

HERMODACTYL. n. s. [ἡρμώδης and δάκτυλος.] Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length.

This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used.

Hill, Mat. Med.

HERM. n. s. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, heron, and bittern.

Poetschorn on Drawing.

A hernia would certainly succeed.

Wieman, Surgery.

HERNSHAW. n. s. [from heron; and written also herensaw, and heronshaw, whence the vulgar corruption handshaw, noticed by Warburton in one of the following examples. It is likewise written heron-sew: from heron and sew, for purse; from the propensity of the bird to pursue fish. Skinner. Craven Dialect.] A heron.

As when a cast of fulcons make their flight
At an heron shaw, that lies aloft on wing,
The whyles they strike at him with heedless might

The warie foule his bill doth backward wing.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. 9.

Like a tame heron. B. Jonson, Staple of News.
"I know a hawk from a heron." Shakspeare's Hamlet. This was a common proverbial speech. The Oxford editor alters it to "I know a hawk from an heron;" as if the other had been a corruption of the players; whereas the poet found the proverb thus corrupted in the mouth of the people: so that the critic's alteration only serves to shew us the original of the expression.

Warburton.

HERO. n. s. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

I sing of heros and of kings,

In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.
In this view he comes to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope on the Odeys.
Like as thy honours, not that here thy dust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust.

Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect; as, a hero in learning.

HEROISS. n. s. [from hero; herois, Lat.]

Boilingbroke

From John of Gausot doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroic line. Baskin.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroic name
To person or to poem. Milton.

Virtue makes heroic virtue live,
But you can life to virtue give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

He thinks heroic poetry, till now,
Like some fantastic fairy land did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroic subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war.

Dryden.

An heroic poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroic virtue by example. Dryden.

4. Denoting that kind of verse, in which heroic or epic poems are usually composed.

The measure is Heroic heroic verse without rhyme, as that of Homer in Greek, and of Virgil in Latin. Milton, Introduction, to P. L.

HEROICK. n. s. An heroic verse; which consists, in our poetry, of ten feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroic. Dryden.

- HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

fourth, and most excellent of the heroicomic poems.
Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

HEROINE. n. s. [from hero; heroine, Fr.]

A female hero. Anciently, according to Hellenic analogy, herocess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroicess assum'd the woman's place.
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you.

Addison.

HEROISME. n. s. [heroisme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality.

Broomes, Notes to the Odyssy.

HERON. n. s. [heron, Fr.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull.

Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth wings. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hera.

The low ring hawk let future poets sing,
Whose terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted heron survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY.† n. s. [from heron; commonly pronounced hermy. Dr. Johnson joins heronshaw with this word as denoting place, without any authority; and it is believed to be used only of the bird.
See HERNshaw.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their lead to a large heronry above three miles. Derham, Physico-Theology.

HERONRY.† n. s. See HERNshaw.

suppose; these fish usually appearing together in large numbers.] A small sea-fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pickard, herring, mackerel, and cod.

Carter, Surf. of Cornwall.

Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive, used when it refers to a substantive going before; as, this her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt
tears;

If so, my eyes are oft'n wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.

Whom ill fate would ruin it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

And pining, let the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' eldient giants peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

ereal; suitable to funerals. See HEARSELIKE.

To HERV. v. a. [hepan, Sax. to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thou art, now as the time of merry-making,
Not Pan to beg, nor with Love to play;
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

But were thy years green, as now be mine, —
Then wouldst thou learn to care of love,
And herse with hymns thy lass's glory. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

HERSITANCY. n. s. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my herisitancy about the air is, that I forget to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopp'd.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or heri- sitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Macbray.

HERSITANT.† adj. [from hesitate.] Pausing; wanting volubility of speech.

u v 2

He was a man of no quick utterance, but often hesitant; but spoke with great reason.

Boswell's Life and Times, P. III, p. 47.
To HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, Fr.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A timorous fear, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HE'SITATION. n. s. [from hesitate].

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one; they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen were so in diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interjections, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEXAK'DRON.* n. s. [from hex and dron, Gr.] In geometry, a cube.

HE'XAGON.* n. s. [from hexagone, French; ἑξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL.† adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered.

Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bestial diamonds into hexagonal.

See HEXAGON.

HEXA'GONY.* n. s. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonia, or hexagonal cells of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

HEXA'METER.* n. s. [from ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroic.

Dryden.

HEXA'METER.* adj. Having six metrical feet.

Like Ovid's Fæsti, in hexameter and pentameter verse.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HEXAME'TRICAL.* adj. Consisting of HEXA'METRICK. } hexameters.

That Ovid among the Latin poets was Milton's favourite, appears not only from his elegiac but his hexametric poetry.

Warton, Prof. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

I have already cited his version of Macgregor's hexametric poetry.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 458.

HE'XAPEDE.* n. s. [from ἑξ, Gr. and pedes, Lat.] A fathom.

Cocheram.

HEX'ANGULAR.† adj. [from ἑξ and angulus, Lat.] Having six corners.

Hexangular springs or shoots of crystal.

Woodward.

HE'XAPOD.* n. s. [from ἑξ and πῶς.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapoda, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapoda are eaten in America.

Ray.

HEXAS'TICK.† n. s. [from ἑξ and στῆξ, Gr.] Usually written hexastick; but hexastick would be more correct. It was formerly hexastichon.] A poem of six lines.

His request to Diana is in hexastich.

Selden on Dryden's Polyd. S. 1.

That famous hexastick which Saxenian made.

Howell, lett. i. 1. 36.

The following hermetic on a similar subject, is of the same rude period.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 1. 30.

HE'XASTYLE.* n. s. [from ἑξ and στῆξ, Gr.] In architecture, a building with six columns in front.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bid the wood with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyric.

Prior.

HEY.* See, under HAY, To dance the HAY, and also HEYDROUY.

HEY'DAY.† interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder; pronounced high-day.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday!
Heyday. n. s. A frolic; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgement.

Shakespeare.

HEY'DROUY.† n. s. [perhaps from heyday, and guise, meaning in a frolic manner; or from hay, in the sense of dancing the hay, i. e. in a figure or company of eight, huit, Fr. Dr. Johnson merely notices this word as if it were heydegive, and corrupts the example in Spenser accordingly. There is no such word as heydegive.] A kind of dance; a country-dance, or round, as the contemporary commentator on Spenser explains it.

Friendly Færies, met with many Graces,
And lightfoot Nymphs, can chase the lingering night
With heydegives and trimly trodden Cal.

Our banquet done, we had our music by,
And then, you know, the youth must needs go dance,
First, galliards; then, larroume; and bridegys.

Brown's Works of a Young W. (1577).

The nimble Cambrin fills
Dance ay-day-gies amongst the hills.

Dryden, Polyd. S. 5. Arg.
By wells and rills, in meadows greens,
We nightly dance our ay-day pair.

Old Song of Robin Goodfellow.

HEY'WARD.* See HAYWARD.

HIA'TION.* n. s. [from hio, Lat.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hicion, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIA'TUS.* n. s. [from hiatus, Lat.] 1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatuses are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it.

Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, as usual where the cutting off of one word is prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself.

Pope.

HIBE'RNAL.† adj. [from hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warning power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIBERNIAN.* n. s. [from hibernus, Lat.] Hibernia, the Latin name of Ireland; Hibernia, old French; Dbeynia, Sax.;

adopted, according to some, from Iberia, and the Iberi, in Spain; according to others from the Celt. ibla, ivar, denoting western.] An Irishman.

There is one Hibernian, whose mind is superior to the general delusion, as his talents and erudition are superior to the antiquarian scribblers of the present day.

Campbell, Eccl. and Lit. Hist. of Ire. p. 960.

HIBE'RNIAN.* adj. Relating to Ireland.

HIBE'RNICISM.* n. s. [Lat. Hibernicus.] A mode of speech peculiar to natives of Ireland.

HICCIUS DOCTUS.† n. s. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves. Dr. Johnson.—

The term is supposed to have arisen from the veneration in which the Roman Catholic priests were, in old times, held; the presence of whom, in the assemblies of the people, was announced with the words, hic est doctus! hic est doctus! See Brand's Popular Antiq. vol. ii. p. 417.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Druidwell dock,
At Westminster and Hick's school,
And Arcidius doctus play'd in all;

Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes.

Hudibras.

HICCOUGH.† n. s. [from hicken, Danish. Dr. Johnson.—The orthography of this word is very unsettled; some writing hiccup; others, hiccough, hick, hiccho, and hicet. The last is French, hoquet, and have Latin, hoquetus.—Hick is both Danish and English, and may be the British ig also; or may be an abbreviation of any of the rest. Hiccup, or hiccup, is the Belgick hiccup, as hiccho is their hicchock. Hicough is so given, because it seems to have something of the nature of a cough. Pegge.—From the Su. Goth. hicka, whence our old word yezzen in the same sense.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccup o'er and o'er. Cromwell.

Sneezing curbs the hiccup, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown, Vulg. Err.

If the stomach be hurt, hiccup or hicough follows.

Hiccup, Surgery.

TO HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

TO HIC'CUPE. v. n. [corrupted from hicough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My heart to grow, my ears to prick up.
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup.

Hudibras.

HIC'KWALL.† n. s. A bird; a kind of HIC'KWAY. } small woodpecker.

Chambers.

HID.† part. pass. of hide. [Sax. hibben, hiden.] hibben.

This fame shall be achiev'd, renowned on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid.

Milton, P. L.

Other hidden cause

Left them superior. Milton, P. L.
 Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night. Pope.
 H'IDENLY. * adv. [from hide.] Privily; secretly. Cotgrave, and Shakespeare.
 H'ID-GE. * n. s. [from hide.] A tax formerly laid on every hide of land.
 HIDA'LGIO. * n. s. [Spanish.] One of noble birth.

Of all the miseries which he had endured, this was the greatest; that he, an hidalgos, a gentleman of Spain, should live to become a servant.
Terry, Voyage to East Ind. (1655), p. 169.
 To HIDE. v. a. [from hide.] To part, pass, hide or hidden. [uban, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Awake, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shakespeare.
 His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
 Nile hovers him knocking at his own world's gates, And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephew's fate. Dryden.
 Thus the sire of gods and men below:
 What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece.
 The occasion but extorted that, or this. Dryden.
 Then for my corpse a homely grave provide,
 Which leave and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

See hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
 The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection! Addison.
 The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides his head
 In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
 Is fill'd with peace. Rowe, Royal Convert.
 To HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.
 Our bold talents in full view display'd;
 Your virtues open fastest in the shade;
 Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide;
 Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride, Pope.
 Weakness or delicacy.

HIDE AND SEEK. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

HIDE.† n. s. [hybe, Sax.; haude, Dutch.]
 1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
 Through nine bull hides, each under other plac'd
 On his broad shield. Dryden.
 Priustratus was first to grasp their hands,
 And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin; in contempt.
 Ob, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
 How could'st thou thus drain the life-blood of the child? Shakespeare.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
 Cleaves to his back; & a famild face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [hide, hyde, Fr.; hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till; hiba, hybe, Saxon.

 "When the realm was first divided into hides, a hide contained 100 acres, that is, 120 according to English measure.—The just value of a hide, that might fit the whole kingdom, never appears from Domesday; and was ever of an uncertain quantity." Kellam on Domesday Book, p. 231.]

One of the first things was a more particular inquiry than had been before of every kind of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watton.

HIDEBOUND.† adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.
 2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.
 To blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hidebound humour, which he calls his judgement. Milton, Areopagitica.
 And still the harsher and hidebound
 The damfels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.

In detestation of the former, when they observe to be often absurd and unreasonable, but always hidebound and fantastical.
Goodman, Wint. Ec. Conf. P. i.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious.
 He hath wealth; yet he will scarce use it, though to purchase his own health; but sterves his poor hidebound carcass, and impoverisheth his body to enrich his purse. Steevens, Wint. Ec. Conf. P. i. p. 91.
 Hath my purse been hidebound to my hungry brother? Quarles, Judg. & Mer. The Sowerer.
 Cares and sleepless nights tormented with continual lankings a hidebound miser.

Situation of Paradise, &c. (1685), p. 78.
 HI'DEOUS.† adj. [hideus, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—Perhaps from the Icel. heide, a desert, a wild frightful place. Our word at first was hidous: "So hidous is the shoure," i. e. dreadful. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.
 If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hidous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
 Too hidous to be shewn. Shakespeare, Othello.
 I fled, and cry'd out death!
 Hell trembled at the hidous name, and heid'd
 From all her caves, and back resounded death. Milton, P. L.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
 Her hidous looks and hellish form return;
 Her curling snakes with hissing fill the place,
 And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects; the following use is less authorized.
 'Tis forced through the histories at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hidous and amazing noise. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hidous hanger of dominion. Spenser.
 HI'DEUSLY.† adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
 To welcome the condition of the time;
 Which cannot look more hideously on me,
 Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare.
 This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HI'DEUSNESS.† n. s. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness; terror.
 Go antickly, and shew outward hideousness. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

She presented in her trusty glass
 The faithful copy of my hideousness. Ben Jonson, Psych. (1651), p. 79.

HI'DER.† n. s. [from the verb.] One that hides. Shakespeare.

HI'DING. * n. s. [from To hide.] Concealment; the act of withholding from sight. Shakespeare.
 There was the hiding of his power. Hub. iii. 4.

HIDING-PLACE. * n. s. A place of concealment.
 Had they now known the world, and the hiding-places that are therein, they would have gone into the dens and rocks of the mountains. Shakespeare on the Creation, p. 204.

To HIE.† v. n. [hizan, hixan, Saxon; heya, Icel.: "Hiege thou to come to me soon." Wicliffe, 2 Tim. iv. 9. In the present version, Do thy diligence. Spenser, in his early poetry, writes it high: "The night high fast, it's time to be gone." Shep. Cal.]

1. To hasten; to go to haste.
 When they had mark'd the changed skies,
 They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Spenser, F. Q.

My will is even this.
 That presently you hie you home to bed. Shakespeare.
 Well, I will hie,
 And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakespeare.

Some to the shores do fly,
 Some to the woods, or whether far advis'd;
 But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.
 The snake no sooner hies'd,
 But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd. Croshaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge, Accurs'd, and in a curst hour, he hies. Milt. P. L.
 'Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
 Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.
 The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.
 Auster hy'd him;
 Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Croshaw.

HI-E. * n. s. [from the verb. Yet retained in Yorkshire, according to Pegge: "Make as much hie as you can."] Haste; diligence.

He—charged him in hie
 To shapen for his life some remedie. Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

HI'ERARCH.† n. s. [hies, and arch; hierarchie, French.]

1. The chief of a sacred order.
 Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
 Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
 Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milt. P. L.

2. The chief of any establishment.

The political learning of accommodating hierarch, or statesmen.

Cicero, Phil. to Hyl. Conv. S.

HIERARCHICAL adj. [from hierarch.] Belonging to sacred government.

The great hierarch standard was to move.

Milton, P. L.

HIERARCHICAL adj. [hierarchique, Fr.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

This epistle [of St. Paul to Titus] is one of the three, not unfrequently styled the hierarch epistles, "de statu ecclesiasticis composita," as Tertullian speaks; being so many rescripts apostolical to Timothy, and Titus; (the one, desired by St. Paul to stay at Ephesus, prime of Asia; the other, left in Crete, metropolis of that and the neighbour islands;) directing them, how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God, &c.

Bishop Hall was the defender of our hierarch establishment. Watson, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.

HIERARCHY n. s. [hierarchie, French.] 1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings;

Out of the hierarchies of angels seen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the east.

Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heaven's charioters, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarch. Dunce.

Jerusalem, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarch.

Sindys.

The world survey'd.

These the supreme king

Enthroned to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarch, the orders bright.

Milton, P. L.

The blessedness of mortal nights, now questioned
The highest saint in the celestial hierarch, began to be so important, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her.

Hoodell, Voc. Forest.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The prebiterary had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarch of England. Bacon.

While the whole Levitical hierarch continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarch of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH n. s. [hieroglyphe, HIEROGLYPHIC adj. French; lyph, sacred, and γλυφω, to carve.]

2. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied; Hieroglyphics were used before the alphabet invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphic the adjective.

He gave her a kind expression, by a quaint device sent unto her in a rich jewel, fashioned much after the manner of the trivial hieroglyph used in France, called "Rebus de Picardy."

Sir G. Buck, Hist of Rich. III. (1644), p. 115.

This hieroglyph of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyph of life. Wilkins, Derivation.

Hierodotus, holding the very name hieroglyph, speaks much plainer. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 2.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphic. Fontenay.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphics grac'd.

Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of nouns. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL adj. [hieroglyphique, HIEROGLYPHIC adj. French, from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys, Travels.

The Egyptian serpent figures time;
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;

If my affection there were to win,
First cast thy hieroglyphic skin. Cleveland.

The original of the coeque was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its mortality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was to be hieroglyphic of the sun. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGRAM n. s. [hierogramme, Fr. lyph, sacred, and γράμμα, letter.] A kind of sacred writing.

HIEROGRAMMATIC adj. [hierogrammatique, Fr. from hierogram.] Expressive of holy writing.

Clement adds to epistolic [writing] the hierogrammatic, which was alphabetically; but, being confined to the use of the priests, was not so well known. Aule, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 3.

HIEROGRAMMATIST n. s. [Gr. hieroglyph, hieroglyphic.] A writer of hieroglyphics.

There were two sorts of languages and characters among the Egyptians; one common, and used by all, constituted for their trade and commerce with mankind, and which was that tongue or idiom called the Coptic or Phœnician; and the other used only by priests, prophets, hierogrammatists, or holy writers, and the like persons in sacerdotal orders. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 291.

HIEROGRAMPHICAL adj. [from hierogrammatist.] adj. [from hierogrammatist.] adj. [from hierogrammatist.]

HIEROGRAMPHIC adj. [from hierogrammatist.] adj. [from hierogrammatist.] adj. [from hierogrammatist.]

HIEROGRAMPHICALLY adv. [from hierogrammatist.] adv. [from hierogrammatist.] adv. [from hierogrammatist.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due distributions we may not be pinching and niggardly; it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale.

Base thou art!
To higgle thus for a few blows.

To gain thy knight an op'nt spouse. Hodkins.

Why all this higling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLE n. s. [from higgle.] Dr. Johnson. — Some have considered it an alteration of eggler, a hawk who collects eggs, &c. for sale.] One who sells provisions by retail.

The Temple itself was profaned into a den of thieves, a rendezvous of higglers and scoundrels. South, Serms. liii. 381.

HIGH adj. [Goth. hauh; Sax. heah, hiz, hih, superl. heort; Dutch, hoog; whence the old Fr. haug, height.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep or low downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular degree, saved. Barrow.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet, Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast.

Dryden.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporal being. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul. Baister.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest; high sheriff; high steward; high bailiff; high constable.

Milton, Il Pens.

23. Zealous in the cause of others; as, he was high in the praise of him; he was a high man for the king.

24. A term applied, some time after the revolution, to the church; which was raised by the dissenters, in order to break the church party, by dividing the members into high and low; and the opinion raised, that the high joined with the papists, inclined the low to fall in with the dissenters.

Swift, Exam. No. 43.

The terms high church, and low church, as commonly used, do not so much denote a principle, as they distinguish a party. They are like words of battle, that have nothing to do with their original signification, but are only given out to keep a body of men together, and to let them know friends from enemies.

Addison, Tuller, No. 270.

He is said, by the author of the Biographia, to have declared himself of the party who had the honourable distinction of high churchmen.

Johnson, Life of Yalden.

HIGH, a adv.

1. Aloft. Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars Up to the fiery concave, towering high.

Milton, P. L.

Milton, P. L.

On HIGH, a adv.

1. Above; aloft. Dr. Johnson gives high as a substantive, with the following example from Dryden; observing that the substantive, which he defines high place, elevation, is used only with from or on. It is evidently, however, only an adverb; and Dryden's from high merely an elliptical expression of from on high.

The windows from on high are open.

Isaiah, xlvii. 18.

The day-spring from an high hath visited us.

St. Luke, i. 78.

When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive.

Had that same boaster, as he rode on high, To leave to him that lady.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 16.

To HIGH, a To hasten. See To HIZ.

HIGH-a Is much used in composition, with variety of meaning. Dr. Johnson says; but, as Mr. Mason has observed, the number of these compositions would be much diminished, if high were considered as an adverb, which it really is, and were for that reason printed as a separate word. Our poets, however, abundantly use it in composition, as the additions to such words, already given by Dr. Johnson, will show.

HIGH-AIMED, a adj. Having lofty or grand design.

Thou, — for all Thy high-aim'd hopes, gain'dst but a flaming fall.

Crashaw, Transl. of Marino.

3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.

Destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure. Job. xxi. 23.

4. Excellence; value.

The park for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and brownings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land. Hood, Lett. i. ii. 8.

HIGHT. † [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite tense, with a passive signification: hacan, to call; Saxon; heissen, German. Dr. Johnson.—This is not accurate. For, that it is not confined to the past tense, the laughable prologue alone in the Midsummer Night's Dream might prove; but it was formerly not uncommon in other forms of passive signification.]

1. Is called; is named; am named.

Now highte I Philostrate. Chaucer, Kn. Tale. Bright is her brow, and Geraldine she hight. Lt. Surrey, Son. 6. (1587.) fol. 5. b.

This grisly beast, which by name lion hight, The trusty Thiboy, coming first by night, Did scare away, or rather did affright. Shakespeare, Midn. N. Dream.

2. To be called.

Cheer up the countenance, expel austerity, bring in alacrity. Burton, Anecd. of Mr. p. 284.

Averses restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seren commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incoherence and regulated exuberance from wine. Brown.

HIL'ARY TERM. [In law.] The term which begins on the twenty-third of January: Terminus Sancti Hilarii. Cowel.

HILD. in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mathild, an heroic lady. Gibson.

HIL'DING. n. s. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate. Hughes's Spenser. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke and Mr. Malone concur in deducing this word from the Sax. hildan, to crouch, to bend down; and the former assimilates this derivation to that which he gives of coward, viz. the English comer. But that word of shame is the ancient French coward, which took its origin from cowe, the tail, as the Italian codardo has from codice, the same; and as the low Latin caudatus has been applied to the timid and pusillanimous. V. Du Cange.

1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow. He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen The horse he rode on. Shakespeare.

If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect. Shakespeare.

A base slave, A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

2. It is used likewise for a mean woman. Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench; Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakespeare.

This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power, And sets us all at naught. Romeo, Just. Shore.

HILL. n. s. [hil, Sax. from the verb hilan, or helan, to cover. "Any heap of earth, or stone, &c. by which the plain or level surface of the earth is covered." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 382.]

An elevation of ground less than a mountain. My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and gette; Swift.

Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney. Jervauld is seated on two hills, Of heath unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax.

Three sides are sure imbr'd with crags and hills, The rest is easy, scant to rise epp'd; But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part: So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill looks round to view.

Granville.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plastic virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

Chapin.

To HILL,* v. a. [Sax. hılan; Goth. huljan, to cover. See To HELE.] To cover. A bed-hilling is a quilt or coverlet, in the north of England, according to Grose.

With the cludes of his love
She killed all his bedde about.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. v.

Ye shall enquire yf there be any house in the warde, that is hylled with any other thyng than tyle, or slat, or lede, for peryll of fire.

Arnold's Chron. sign. F. 5 b.

Those mountains

Hill'd with snow. Carver, Poems, p. 145.

HILL'D.* adj. [from hill.] Having hills. The power, thus stigmatized, is a power seated in the seven-hilled city.

Bp. Hieron on the Proph. Sermon. xi.

HILLING,* n. s. [from To HILL.]
1. A covering; as, "the hyllying of a house." Prompt. Parv. A bed-hilling. See To HILL.

2. An accumulation. Come then, all you that aim at the hilling up of noble gold, and employ your hours in a more useful traffic.

Hewitt, Sermon, p. 41.

HILLOCK,* n. s. [from hill.] A little hill. Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater: what, judge you, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus?

Silencey.

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row belms, on hillocks green.

Milton, L'Al.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison, on Italy.

HILLY,* adj. [from hill.]

1. Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Drina remain yet her very Aborigines, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

Hovell.

Climbing to a hilly steep,

He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden.

Lo! how the Norick plains

Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights.

Philips.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would choose to travel through a plain one.

Addison.

2. Like a hill; lofty.

Better to have iv'd

Poor and obscure, and never call'd the top

Of hilly empire, than to die with fear

To be thrown headlong down almost as soon

As we have reach'd it. Beaumont and Fl. Prophets.

HILT,* n. s. [hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,

And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,

With crowns imperial; crowns, and coronets.

Shakespeare.

Take thou the hilt,

And when thy face is cover'd, as 'tis now,

Guide thou the sword. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays

A rudely gleam; whose hilt, a silver blade.

Pope, Odyssey.

HILTED,* adj. [from hilt.] Having a hilt; as, a silver-hilted sword.

HIM,* [him, Saxon; imma, Goth.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he handed. Gen. xiv.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjective mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him. Accidence.

3. Sometimes used for himself.

Sweet touch, the engine that love's how doth bend,

The sense wherewith he feels him defiled.

Chapman, Ovid's Banquet, &c. (1595.)

The hungry Tantalus might have fill'd him now.

P. Fletcher, Purple. Jul. v. 64.

4. Him thought. An ancient form of speech of the same construction as methought; meaning, he thought.

When he [St. George] sawe the arraye of that damsell, him thought that it should be a woman of grette worth. Lib. Fratic. sign. k. ij.

Him thought he heard the softly whistling wind.

Franker, Tass. xiii. 40.

Him thought he by the brook of Cleverth stood.

Milton, P. R.

HIMSELF,* pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself. Beaumont.

With shame remembers, while himself was one

Of the same herd, himself the same had done.

Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again. Judges, iii. 19.

God himself is with us for our captain.

2 Chron. xiii. 19.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd

Above the clouds, as high as heaven himself.

Shakespeare.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David bid himself in the field. 1 Sam. xii. 24.

It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set a work by a reprovable badness in himself. Shakespeare.

Nothing is nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Alas! went one way by himself, and Othobald went another way by himself. 1 Kings, xviii. 6.

HIN,* n. s. [hin, Saxon, from hinnan, to hinder.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

Exod. xxix. 40.

HIND,* adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost; [hyndan, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face; as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray.

The stag

Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more, And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore

Pope.

HIND,* n. s. [hinbe, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he drew, with glancing dart amiss, A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy

Did love as life. Spenser, F. Q.

Canst thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Job, xxxix. 1.

Not Hercules more lands or labours knew,

Nor thought the brazen-footed hind he slew.

Dryden.

2. [hine, Sax.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of four clouters, to Dutch-lane. Shakespeare.

3. [hinnean, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustic.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before, To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield

Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,

And sheets of lightning light the standing field.

Dryden.

He cloth'd himself in coarse array, A labouring hind in shew. Dryden, Fob.

HINDBERRIES,* n. s. [hinbeprian.] The same as raspberries. The Saxon word has been wrongly interpreted by Lye fragum. Craven Dialect.

To HINDER,* v. a. [hinþan, Sax. hinderen, Dutch; probably from the Goth. hinder, behind.] To obstruct; to stop; to let to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way. Gen. xiv. 56.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered of their labour. Arist. xvii. 50.

If the alms were hindered only by envy, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because envy took not liberty away from the giver.

Solitude damps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing.

Temple.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right. Locke.

To HINDER v. n. To raise hindrances; to cause impediment.

You minims of hindering knot-grass made.

Shakespeare.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commanders, enterprising for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written.

Dryden.

HINDER,* adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face; opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his horse. Addison.

HINDERANCE,* n. s. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction; with of, sometimes with to before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, teaching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth might and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions more pernicious than the first; yea most extremely sometimes opposite to the first. Hooker.

They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden.

x x 2

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love?

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hindrances out of the way that leads to justice.

HINDERENDS.* n. s. pl. Refuse of corn; such as remains after it is winnowed. A northern word. Præise of Yorksh. Ale. Craven Dial. & Brockett.

HINDERER.† n. s. [from hinder.] One or that which hinders or obstructs.

Not enterprising to run afore, and so by their rashness become the greatest hinderers of such things, as they more arrogantly than godly would seem, by their own private authority, most hotly to set forward.

K. Edward VI. Proc. before the Order of Communs. (1547.)

A coadjutor commonly proves an hinderer; and by his envious clashing, both often dig his partner's grave.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 275.
Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow.

HINDERLING.† n. s. [from hind or hinder. Dr. Johnson gives no example of the word; and Mr. H. Tooke, in his remarks on hiding, (Div. Parl. ii. 315) doubts the existence of hinderling.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

From this root [hind] comes the Anglo-Saxon hæwring, properly one who comes far behind his ancestors, famulus in approximation. In Legibus Edw. Confess. c. 53. "Occidentales Saxonicæ habent in proverbio summi descripti hæwring, i. e. omni lœvitate dejecta et recedens imago;" the scandal of his family.

Callender's Two Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 56.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, though'er occasion keeps him from us now.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last.

A loving gamester.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run.

HINDOO.* n. s. [Persian. "Hindoo for the people, and Hindustan for the country, now generally used by natives and foreigners, were probably given them by their neighbours the Persians. The river improperly called the Indus is quite out of the question, either as giving a name to the country, as many have imagined, or borrowing one from it, according to the opinion of the late Alexander Dow, Esq. in the dissertation prefixed to his Hist. of Indostan, p. xxxi. l. 12; who in the same page asserts, that "the Hindoo are so called from Indo or Hindoo, which in the Sanscrita language signifies the Moon." It is true that rendon is one of the names of the moon, but not hindoo. Let it suffice, that there are such words as Hindoo, or Hindustan, in the Sanskreet language. In Persian we find hind for the country, and hindoo for the people." Wilkins's Heetopades, 1787, p. 392.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

The British laws may, in some degree, be softened and tempered by a moderate attention to the peculiar and national prejudices of the Hindoo.

Haled, Code of Great Laws, Pref.

HINDRANCE.* See HINDERANCE.

HINGE.† n. s. [from hingle or hangle or hang. Dr. Johnson.—I believe no one ever before saw or heard of hingle and hangle. All the three words, however, are merely the past participle of the verb hangan, to hang. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 358.—Mr. Tooke might have found, "a hinge or hingel" in Barret's Alveary, 1580. Skinner and others have also deduced this word from the verb hang. In Scotland hing is still used for hang; and Pegge says, in the north of England also.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate
Of heaven arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divide,
And where the way they cannot find, they force.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,

The gates are forc'd.

2. The cardinal points of the world, East, West, North, and South.

Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From four hinges of the world.

If when the moon is in the hinge at East,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;

Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted.

Men think we stand on ruins, Nature shakes
About us, and this universal frame
So loose, that it but wants another push
To leap from off its hinges.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as an hinge.

Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap.

To HINGE.* v. n. To turn as upon a hinge; to hang; as the settlement of the matter hinges upon this point.

HINGE.* adj. Active; supple; pliant.

Wilbraham's Cheshire Glossary.

To HINNATE.* v. n. [Latin, hinnio.]

To HINNY.* v. n. To neigh. Cockerham.

He neigheth and hinneth; all is but hinging sophistry.

Hy. Jenson, Northdomen Fair.

To HINT.† v. a. [enter, to implant, Fr. Skinner and Dr. Johnson.—From the hand. Serenius.—From the Norm. Sax. henbe, to take hold on any thing. Rev. Mr. Lemon.—From hentan, to take hold of; hint being something taken. Mr. H. Tooke.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

For examples out of other histories to hint a few of them.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To kind pure thought, and warm the favour'd soul.

To HINT.† v. a. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem.

Admission, on the Georgicks.

HINT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and insinuations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

Upon this hint I spake;
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them.

III.P.† n. s. [Goth. hup; Dutch, hippe; Sax. hipe, Diaper-hanger-ecce, the sciatica, or hip gout.

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatics?

IIppocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally troubled with the sciatics, or hip gout.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

To set the same mark on the hip
Both of their sound and rotten sheep.

Against a stump his trunk the monster grinds,
And ranc'd 'd his hip with one continu'd wound.

3. To have on the Hip. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brack of Venice, whom I cherish
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip.

4. Hip and Thigh. A phrase used in our present version of the Bible, and sometimes in conversation, denoting perhaps complete overthrow.

He smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter.

Sampson hip and thigh, pell-mell, lappish with his leg and foot only, slew the Philistines with a great slaughter.

Ap. Richardson on the O. Testament, p. 66.

Hir. n. s. [from heopa, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogrose.

Eating hips and drinking water foam.

Spenser, Hob. Tule.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shaksp.
Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To HIP, v. a. [from the noun.] To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd. Shakspere.

HIP, interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin eho, heus!
Ainsworth.

To HIPPE, v. n. To push with a head.
Praise of Yorkshire Ale. Grose hence observes, that "an ox, apt to push with his horns, is said to hippe." He adds, that this northern word, when applied to a person, as, "to hippe, or hippe at one,"
means to make mouths at or affront one.

HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poets' cares;
One foot the sock, t' other the buskin wears;
Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do it,
Like Volcuius hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP, † adj. A corruption of hypocon- HIPPIUM, † drick. Ainsworth.

I fancy you are a little hippy; and I, I hope,
you fight yourself without any reason.

Graces, Spirit. Quiside, B. 9. ch. 12.
HIP'PED, † adj. [from the corrupt word
hip.] Melancholy.

To some coffee house I stray
For news, the waman of a day;
'Tis from the hipp'd discourages gather,
'Tis politics go by the weather.

Green's Spoken, p. 10.
HIP'PHALT, † adj. [hip and halt.] Lame.

See HIPNOT.
Volucous of whom, I spake,
He had a curlew upon the back,
And thereto he was hipp'd-halt.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

HIP'PINS, n. s. pl.
1. Stepping stones over a brook. [contracted from the Teut. hippelen.] Craven Dialect.

2. Children's cloths; a kind of towel: a clout. Common in the north of England.

HIPPOCAMPE, n. s. [ἵππος, Gr.; hip- pocampe, Fr.] A sea-horse.

Jove's bright lance,
Guiding from rock her chariot's hippocampus.

Brown.

HIPPOCENTAUR, n. s. [ἵππος, Gr.; hip- pocentaure, French.] A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimæras to be imagined, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion?
Dryden.

HIPPOCRASS, n. s. [ἵππος, French.; quasi vinum Hippocratis.] A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocras, the wine,
Was all the bowl, with ancient ribbons fine. King.

HIPPOCRATES'S SLEEVE, n. s. A woollen bag made by joining the two opposite angles of a square piece of flannel, used to strain syrups and decoctions for clarification. Quincy.

HIPPOCRATISM, n. s. [from Hippocrates.]
The philosophy of Hippocrates, applied to the science of medicine; or the doctrine of Hippocrates, considered with regard to the means of prolonging life.

Chambers.

HIPPODAME, n. s. [ἵππος, Gr.; hip- podame, Fr. Spenser has departed from analogy in writing hippodame.] A sea-horse.

Infernal hags, centaurs, bents, hippodames.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. li. 50.

That his swift chariot might have passage wyde,
Which foure great hippodomes did draw, in temple stile. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 40.

HIPPODROME, n. s. [ἵππος, a horse, and dromos, a course, Gr.; hippodrome, Fr.] A course for chariot and horse races, or exercises.

Within the hippodrome many of the cavalry used to ride. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 162.
Stukely supposes these two banks to have formed the ground for a British hippodrome, or horse-race. Warton, Hist. of Abingdon, p. 70.

HIPPUGRIFF, n. s. [ἵππος, and griff; hip- pogriff, French.] A winged horse; a being imagined by Aristotle.

He caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff bore through the air sublime. Milton, P. R.

A centaur, hippogriff, and a flying dragon, are things that were never seen.

Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 185.

HIPPOTAMUS, n. s. [ἵππος, and τάμας.] The river horse. An animal found in the Nile.

HIPSHOT, † adj. [hip and shot.] Sprained or dislocated in the hip.

The field this hip-shot grammarian cannot set into right frame of construction, neither here in the similitude, nor in the following revelation thereof. Milton, Apol. for Smeatmann.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hip-shot? says the goon to the gossling. L'Entrange.

HIPPORT, n. s. [hip and port.] A plant.
Ainsworth.

HIR, † [Sax., hyr, of them.] In our old language is their.

To HIRE, v. a. [hīran, Saxon; from the Cymr. hir, merces. Serenius.]

1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.

His sordid varior rakes
In hirements, and hires the jakes. Dryden, Jun.

2. To engage a man to temporary service for wages.

They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Isaiah, xlv. 6.
I cannot strike at wretched kermes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear 'tis slaves. Shakspere.

3. To bribe.

Thence first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd, Mow'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. To engage for pay; with the reciprocal word.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceived. 1 Sam. ii. 5.

5. To let; to set for a time at a certain price. This, to prevent ambiguity, has sometimes the particle out; as, he hired out his house to strangers. Dr. Johnson.—This sense seems to be the primary one; at least, it is very ancient.

A man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and dalf a lake, and biddid a tour, and hired it to tillers, [in the present version, let it out].
Wicliffe, St. Mark, xii. l.

HIRE, n. s. [hyre, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.

2. Wages paid for service.
Great thanks and goodly meed to that good iire,
He, thence departing, gave for his pains' hire. Spenser, F. Q.

I have five hundred crownes
The thirty hire I sav'd under your father. Shaks.
Though little was their hire, and light their gain,
Yet somewhat in their share he thriv'd. Dryden.
All arts and artifice Theus could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden.

HIRELESS, † adj. [hire and less.] Without hire; not rewarded; not recompensed; not expecting hire.

Your mibelief my hireless cause scorn.

Duvenant, Gondibert, l. 3.

Poetry,
Oh hireless science, and of all alike
The liberal; meanly the rest each state
In pension treats; but this depends on none.

Duvenant, Gondibert, li. 5.

HIR'LING, n. s. [from hire.]
1. One who serves for wages.

The hirling longs to see the shades descend,
That with the tedious day his toil might gain
In pension treats; but this depends on none.

Duvenant, Gondibert, li. 5.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now she shades thy evening walk with bays,
No hirling she, no prostitute in praise. Pope.

HIR'LING, adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew
Of hirling mourners for his funeral due. Dryden.

HIR'ER, n. s. [from hire.]
1. One who uses any thing, paying a recompence; one who employs others, paying wages.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

To HIR'ER, † See TO HERPLE.

To HIR'BLE, † v. n. [Teut. erblen, cessare
ire, tergiversari.] To move about. Craven Dial.

HIRST, † See HURST.

HIRUTE, † adj. [hirsutus, Lat.]
1. Rough; rugged; shaggy.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirute roots;
the hirute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An hirute beggar's best, that lately fell on scraggs. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 209.

Their bodies, that are affected with this universal melancholy, are most part black;—hirute they are and lean. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 201.

2. Of coarse manners; of rough behaviour.

He looked elderly, and was cynical and hirute
in his behaviour. Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

HIRUTE'NESS, n. s. [from hirute.]
Hairiness.

Leuneros, hiruteous, broad reins, much hair on the brow, &c. shew melancholy.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 58.

HIS, † pronoun possessive. [hyr, Saxon;
i. e. he's.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes us fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.
You shall offend him, and note his passion.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Heav'n and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better it is for the maid;
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps her part in eternal life.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us.

Shakespeare.
He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his.

Lodge.
When'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his.

Addison.
2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Not the dreadful spout,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's car
In his descent. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.
There's not the smallest orb, which thou be-hold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quivering to the young-eyed cherubims. Shaks.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
Opium loathes some of his poisonous quality,
if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine.

Bacon.
3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted. Dr.

Johnson.—"Christ his sake," in our liturgy, is a mistake either of the printers, or of the compilers. "My paper is the Ulysses his bow, in which every man of wit or learning may try his strength." Addison, Guard. No. 98.

This is no slip of Mr. Addison's pen:
he gives us his opinion upon this point very explicitly in another place. "The same single letter [s] on many occasions," says Addison, "does the office of a whole word, and represents the his
and her of our forefathers." Spect.

No. 135. "The latter instance," Lowth observes, "might have shewn him, how groundless this notion is: for it is not easy to conceive, how the letter s added to a feminine noun should represent the word her, any more than it should the word their added to a plural noun;
as, the children's bread. But the direct derivation of this case from the Saxon genitive case is sufficient of itself to decide this matter." Lowth, Introduct.

to Eng. Grammar.

Where is this mark'd man? who lives to age
Fit to be made Metaphorical his page? Donne.

By thy fond consort, by thy father's care,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man s.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaks.

5. Anciently before self.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To HISS. v. n. To breathe thro' through cold or pain; to draw the breath with difficulty. A northern word.
Grose, and Craven Dialect.

His'p'io. v. adj. [old Fr. hispid; Lat. hispidus.] Rough.

John of the wilderness? the hairy child?
The hispid Thibithe? or what Satyr wild?

More, Verax pref. to Hall's Poems, 1646.
To HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-lie; think of that; hissing hot.

Shakespeare.
The merchants shall his at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 56.
See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair.

Dryden, Alexander's Feast.
Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a public exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;
His, clap their hands, and from his country chase.

Sandys.
To HISS. v. a. [hūcan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing, to explode.
Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace.

She would so shamefully fall in the last act,
That instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hiss'd off the stage. Merr.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bulging out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hiss'd off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hiss'd out of all the courts as ridiculous?

Collier on Duelling.
2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Try mother plays, and I
Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue
Will his me to my grave. Shaks. Wind. Tole.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shaks. Macbeth.

Hiss. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

He would have spoke,
But his for his return'd with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, P. L.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of public scorn! Milton, P. L.

Fierce clumpion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hiset, blows, or want, or loss of cars. Pope.

Hiss'ing. n. s. [from hiss.]

1. The noise of a serpent, and of some other animals.

Being scared with beasts that passed by, and hissing of serpents, they died for fear. Nicod. xvii. 9.

2. An object of hisses or disgrace.
To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head. Jerem. xlviii. 16.

Hiss'ingly. v. adv. [from hissing.] With whistling sound. Sherwood.

Hist.† interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some have thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, hush, hist;
but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence. Dr. Johnson.—

Others suppose it to be the Latin interjection of silence, at; considered as an abbreviation of sta, stand, or of siste, stop. But it is most probably from our own word whist, be silent; whist, hust, hist. See To Whist.] An exclamation commanding silence.

The mute Silence sang.
'Less Philonell will design a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night.

Milton, Il Pens.
Dust, hist, says another that stood by, away,
doctor; for here's a whole pack of diabolus coming.

Swift.
HISTORIAL. v. adj. [historial, Fr.] Our elder word for historical.

An historial thing notable.

Chaucer, Doct. of Phys. Tale.
HISTORIAN. n. s. [historicus, Latin; histor- ien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompense
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian? Milton, P. L.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first kind in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not add'd years on years my task would close,
The long histories of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. v. adj. [historique, Fr.
HISTORICK. } historicus, Lat.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burset, Theory.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brags. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]

In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all his- torically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth bid deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hobbes.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope, Essay on Homer.

HISTORIED. v. adj. [from history.] Recorded in history; containing history.

See STORIED.

HISTORIEN. n. s. [from history.] An old word for an historian.

Huntingdonensis, doctor Foynt's histori- ographer of priors' marriages.

Martin on the Marr. of Priests, (1554.) M. ii.

TO HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, history!
Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me.

The third age they term historians; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historyed, and therefore may be believed.

Brown, Fals. Err.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. s. [ἱστορία and γραφία; historiographos, French.] An historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. s. [ἱστορία and γραφία.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORIOLOGY. n. s. [ἱστορία and λογία, description, discourse.] Knowledge of history; explanation of history.

Cockram.

HISTORY. n. s. [ἱστορία, Gr. historia, Lat. historia, French; from ἵστω, skilful, knowing; whence ἱστίον, to inquire, to explore, to know by examination, and to relate.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Caesar scorns the poet's lays;

It is to history he trusts for praise.

Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room.

Warton.

What histories of toil could I declare?

But still long-wear'd nature waxes repair.

Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the Bible, is necessary to divines.

Watts.

HISTORY PIECE. n. s. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the least important figures have some convenient place.

Pope.

HISTORION. n. s. [Fr. historion; Lat. historia.] A player.

Cockram.

HISTORICALTY. adj. [Fr. historionique, historionick.] from the Lat. historio.] Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

A historical contempt
Of what a man fears most.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Historical gestures, representing unto us Apollo's solemnities in his temple at Delos.

Peter Smart, Sermon, at Durham, (1638), p. 24.

Such naked and forlorn Quakers at a part, such more cunning, false, and historical, than those that least affect such pitiful simplicities.

Sp. Taylor, Arif. Handson, p. 164.

Not may this be called an historical parade, or stagey viand and hypocrisy.

Sp. Taylor, Arif. Handson, p. 168.

Though the world be historical, and most seen live ironically, yet be thou what thou singly art, and personate only thyself.

Brown, Chr. Mor. lib. 20.

To consequence of his love and his knowledge of the historical art, he taught the choristers over which he presided to act plays.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 285.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.] Theatrical; in the manner of a buffoon.

HISTORIONISM. n. s. [from historion.] Theatrical or feigned representation.

When personations shall cease, and historionism of happlings be over; when reality shall rule.

Brown, Chr. Mor. lib. 24.

TO HIT. v. a. [from ictus, Lat. Minshew; from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius. From the Sw. Goth. hitta, ferre, attingere. Spegel.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him shall strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived.

Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly.

South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

O' naked he, disguised in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hits he so right?

Sidney.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand.

South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail: used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you.

His very air, that I should call you brother,

At hit did I perceive you were.

Search every comment that your care can find, Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind.

Racine.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the note right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns.

Locke.

Here's an opportunity to show how great a bungler my author is in hitting features.

Aldrich.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinent melancholy!

Whose saintly visage is too bright

To hit the sense of human sight.

Milton, Il Pens.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait; to touch properly.

There you hit him; St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument o'erfalls with him.

Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What price soever can hit of his own secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs.

Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient pipes ringing in his ears, he brought needs in singing his out some of their tunes.

Symonds.

TO HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodice be extension alone, how can they move and hit one another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?

Locke.

Roses, thorns, and shells being sustained in the which the metallic corpuscles, and the solid corpuscles meeting with hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them.

Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Oh expectation fails, and most oft there Where most it promises; and oft it hits Where hope is coldest, and despair most sits.

Shakespeare.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

But thou bring't valour too and wit, Two things that seldom fail to hit.

Hudibras.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible.

Dryden.

All humane race would fain be wits, And millions on for one that hits.

Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd, Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;

There lies my grief.

Dryden, Spens. Friar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner; sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it.

Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon it, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg.

L'Estrange.

None of them hit upon the art.

Addison.

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design.

Bentley.

5. To agree; to suit.

Prey you, let us hit together.

The number so exactly hits.

Waterland, Script. Vind. iii. G.

HIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen paces between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

So be the fam'd Cilician fence prais'd,

And at each hit with wonder seen again.

Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind acts of chance. To perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgement, but a lucky hit.

Smith.

But with more lucky hit than those That use to make the stars depose.

Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail.

L'Estrange.

If concourse did the world compose, And things and hits fortuitous arose, Then any thing might come from any thing; For how from chance can constant order spring?

Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?

Shakspeare.

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking.

Dryden, Dafnemy.

It at first he minds his hits, And drinks champagne among the wits, First hit he tastes the 'twing' lasses.

Prior.

TO HITCH. v. n. [Skinner derives this word from the Sax. hegan, hicgan, which means to strive, or from the French hacher, to move quickly; to which Dr. Johnson assents, defining our word accordingly "to catch, to move by jerks;" but, at the same time, observing that he knows not where it is used but in the following passage from Pope, nor well knows what it there means. The word, however, is used by South; as more than one literary friend has remarked to me, and as I had noted several years since. Dr. Jamieson, illustrating the Scottish verb hatch, (to move quickly up and down, or backwards and forwards in a clumsy manner,) says, that our hitch is used in the same way; although it is a word occurring so rarely, that Johnson could find but one example. To Skinner's etymons he adds the Icel. hika, ceder, recedo, retrocedo, which he considers as the radical word; and Serenius had proposed hagga, to move, to shake; hik, a small motion. — But hitch, in the passage from South, seems to mean to become "entangled or hooked together;" and, in that from Pope, "to be hooked in, to fall into, to be caught, and exposed as it were;" and so may be deduced from the same root as to hook, Teut. hæcken. Hickel, (or hitchel), a hook. Barrett's Alt. 1580. To hitch, to catch hold of any thing with a rope or hook. Coles, Dict. edit. 1685. This is still a sea term; "hitch the fish-hook to the fluke of the anchor." In Gloucestershire, Mr. Malone says, to hitch is used actively in the sense of to make fast; and, as a neutral verb, to stick fast. Thus, after a swing-gate has vibrated backwards and forwards for some time, when the latch drops into the groove made to receive it, the gate is said to hitch. The word has other provincial meanings. Nor is hitch, in the sense of to hook on, or to fasten as with a hook, uncommon in many places. And from the active sense, thus implying hold, has arisen probably the use of the substantive for an impediment.]

1. To become entangled, or hooked together. ["Elementa hamata, et perpicata." Lucret.]

But if this will not do, we are told, that there was an infinite innumerable company of little bodies, called atoms, from all eternity, flying and roving about in a void space, which at length latched together and united; by which union and connection they grew at length into this beautiful, curious, and most exact structure of the universe. A conceit fitter for Bedlam than a school, or an academy. South, Seren. vii. 50.

2. To be caught; to fall into; to be hooked in.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long;
And the sad burthen of some merry song.
Pope, Imit. of Hor. B. 2. Sat. 1.

3. [Spoken of horses.] To hit the legs together in going. Scott.

4. To hop on one leg. Yorkshire. Grose. And so Dr. Johnson defines "to hobble" to hitch. See To HOANLE.

5. To move, or walk. Norfolk. Grose.

HITCH, n. s. [from the verb.] A catch; any thing that holds; an impediment; as, there is a hitch in the business; the man has a hitch in his gait.

I am credibly informed, that there is still a considerable hitch or hobble in your conversation; and that when you speak fast, you speak unintelligibly. Id. Chesterfield.

- To HITCHEL, v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL, n. s. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE, n. s. [hýðe, Saxon.] A small haven to [and] warcs out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER, adv. [hidre, Goth. Insep, hi-Sep, Sax.] To this place from some other.

1. To this place from some other.
Cesar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion, hither came.
Spenser, F. Q.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither.
Shakespeare.

Who brought me hither,
Will bring me hence; no other guide I seek.
Milton, P. R.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this to pick of argument: [huc, Lat. Huc refer causam.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoe'er difference there is between the states of saints in glory: hither we refer whatsoe'er lengtheneth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God.
Hooker.

Hither belong all those tears, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit.

HITHER, adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.

But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighbouring hills descended.
Milton, P. R.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely, that extreme whereto it is finite.

HITHERMOST, adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is eternal can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme.

HITHERTO, adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet.
Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem.
Dryden.

2. More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whilst the famous ancestors
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, though they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.
Hitherto, lords, what your commands import'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying.
Milton, S. A.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd
And with those graces every day bebell'd
The graceful youth.
Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryden.
To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HITHERWARD, } adv. [hýðerwærd, Sax.]
HITHERWARDS, } This way; towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakespeare, Coriol.
The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherward intended speedily. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A puissant and mighty power
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakespeare.
Look now for no enchanting voice; nor fear
The hail of homied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton, S. A.

HIVE, n. s. [hyfe, Saxon; either from the Su. Goth. hafa, a house; or the M. Goth. haban, Icel. hefu, to contain; or the Sax. hupe, Icel. húf, a house; a family. Serenius.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away.
Shakespeare.

So wandering bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive.
Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives: their own honey is their own, and every bee minds late own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.
The commons, like an angry race of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down.
Shakespeare.

3. A company being together.

What modern customs call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive, i. e. bees; and the more, when a disension happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to an habitation.

Ambitious now to take ease
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hid. Cleveland.

To HIVE, v. n. To take shelter together; to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat, drones hive out with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope, Lett.

HIVER, n. s. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hive drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer.

HIVES, n. s. pl. [A corruption of our own word heave, to swell, or rise up.] Eruptions in the skin: used in some parts of the north, according to Mr. Brockett.

To HIZZ, v. n. To hiss. See To HISS.

To have a thousand with red burning spits
Come hissing in upon them. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HIZZING, n. s. An hissing or hiss. See HISSING.

Last, by the sun the organs parch'd and spill'd,
The dismal fog uncertain hissings yield.
May, Lucan, B. 6.

HO, interj. [eho, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Ho, old French; stop, cease; the word made use of for combatants to leave off fighting. Kelham, Norm. Dict. Ho, Welsh, an exclamation, a call.] A call; a sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else; a command to stop; cease; give over; enough.

The duke of Norfolk was not fullie set forward, when the king cast down his warde, and the borderie cried ho, ho. Herford, Chron.

The sacke without botome, which never can say ho.

There be three things never satisfied, and the fourth never saith ho.

Flower's Dialog, 2nd. & Eng. (1578).

Behold, the kinsman of whom Boas spake came by; unto whom he said, Ho, such a one, turn aside, sit down here.

Ruth, iv. 1.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters.

Isaiah, li. 1.

Ho, ho, come forth and see from the land of the north.

Zech. ii. 6.

What noise there, ho?

Shakespeare.

Ho, swain, what shepherd owns these ragged sheep?

Dryden.

Ho, * n. s. [from the interjection.] Stop; bound; limit. Formerly the word was common in this country. Mr. Malone says, it is yet common in Ireland: as, there is no ho with him, i. e. he knows no bounds, he never has enough, he is intemperate. "Out of all ho." Immodic.

Litt. Dict. 1715.

Heer was no ho in devout drinking.

Langham's Lett. of G. B. to E. in 1571.

To rule unruly people, with whom otherwise there were no ho.

Harvey, Pierce's Soveraign (1599).

He once loved the fair maid of Freyngeld out of all ho.

Greene's Friar Bacon.

To Ho, * v. n. To call out. An old seamen, "Hosen, or cryen, as shipmen."

Pr. Parv. "Clamor nauticus vel cantus, ut, heve & home, romblow." Ori.

Vocab. [Teut. hau.] See Ho.

HOAR,† interj. [from ho.] A sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else.

Here dwells my father Jew: ho, who's within?

Shakespeare.

When I cried ho / Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,

Your will. Shakespeare.

HO'ANE, * n. s. [Sax. hæn; Icel. hæn. See HONE.] A fine kind of whetstone.

Cockerm.

HOAR,† adj. [hap, Sax. from hapian, canescere. Mr. H. Tooke.]

Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea-wave.

Thomson.

2. Gray with age.

It govern'd us, and guided evermore

Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar.

Spenser, F. Q.

Let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

1 Kings, ii. 6.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;

Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along.

Pope.

3. White with frost.

Low the woods

Bow their hoar heads.

Thomson, Winter.

4. Mouldy; musty. [hopis, Sax. mucidus, hapian, mucescere; hor, Icel. mucor.]

VOL. II.

Gnyen fods Mammon in a delve Snoozing his treasure hoar.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. Arg.

A hare, sir, in a leuten pig, is something stale and hoar.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

HOAR, * n. z. [from the adjective.] Antiquity; hoariness.

His grants are engrafed on the publick law of Europe, covered with the awful hoar of insuperable ages.

Burke.

To HOAR, * v. n. [Sax. hapian, mucescere.] To become mouldy or musty.

A hare that is hoar,
Is too much for a score,
When its hoars are it is spent.

Old Song in Romeo and Juliet.

HOAR-FROST, n. s. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground.

Ezra, xvi. 14.

In Fahrenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is hoar-frost.

Arbuthnot.

HOARD,† n. s. [haurd, Goth. hope, Sax. from hyrd, Icel. to keep, to guard, Serenius.

And Mr. H. Tooke states it to be the past participle of the Sax. hyrdan, custodire. It may be added, that in the Persones Tale of Chaucer, hoard (as hoard was formerly written) is used for the place to keep treasure in. "Glotonie — is the devil's hoard; ther he hideth him and resteth." Chaucer, C. T. edit. Tyrwhitt, ii. 359.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee hence some nuts.

Shakespeare.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was sowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonally disclosed.

Woodward.

To HOARD,† v. n. [Sax. hopban.] To make hoards; to lay up store.

His fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed.

Spenser, F. Q.

Happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding wrot to hell.

Shakespeare.

To HOARD, v. g.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods require your love!
You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce.

Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it.

Arbuthnot, Art of Publick Lying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasure, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years.

Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the participle have.

I have just occasion to complain of them, who because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as mirrors do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it.

Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,
Is proud, & call'd a careful sturdy man.

Dryden.

HO'ARDER,† n. s. [Sax. hopbepe.] One that stores up in secret.

The hoarders of provision were constrained to open their garners, and the prices of grain abated.

Watson, Penury, to K. Charles I.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be no advantage to nobody but hoarders of money.

Locke.

HO'ARED, * adj. [from hoar.] Mouldy; musty.

All the bread of their provision was dry and hoar'd.

The present version, mouldy.

Josh. ii. 5. Matthew's, Crummi's, and the Bishops' Transl.

HO'ARHOUND,† n. s. [marrubium, Lat.] A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick and viscid matter is the cause; but it is now little used.

Hill.

Pale hoarhound, which he holds of most especial use.

Dryden, Polyth. 8. 15.

HO'ARINESS,† n. s. [from hoary.]

1. The state of being whitish; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns.

Dryden.

2. Mouldiness. Barret, and Sherwood.

Hoariness, or vine-dewiness, such as is on bread or meat long kept; or mouldiness from moisture or lack of cleansing.

Barret.

HOARSE, adj. [hap, Sax. heersch, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song
— Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shores.

Dryden.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooed,
Mournfully hoarse.

Thomson.

HO'ARSELY,† adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

Hard at my feet ran down a crystal spring,
Which did the cumbersome pebbles hoarsely chide
For standing in the way.

Marc, Cupid's Conflict, (1647.)

The bounds at nearest distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid.

Dryden.

HO'ARSENESS, n. s. [from hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarseness or viscous phlegm.

Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had dunn'd it to a hoarseness. Dryden, K. Arthur.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions hoarseness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing.

Arbuthnot on Dissects.

HO'ARY,† adj. [hap, hapuag, Saxon. See HOAR.]

1. White; whitish.

One would think the deep to be hoary.

Johnson, P. L.

The secrets of the hoary deep.

Milton, P. L.

Thus rusted old are scell'd to d.

The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or grey with black.

A comely palmer clad in black attire,
Of ripely years, and hairs all grey.

Seymour, F. Q.
Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city.

Knolles, Hist.
Has then my hoary head deserved it no better?

Rome.
Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promised bliss.

Prior.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shaks.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty. [Hops, Sax.

See the fourth sense of HOAR.]
There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread.

Knolles, Hist.

HO'ASED.* See HOOSE.

HO'AST.* n. s. A cough. See HAUST.

HOAX.* n. s. [Such is the Sax. huçe, or

huç, derision, mockery, irony; though Mr. Malone considers it as de-derived from the cant word hoca, a cheat.

Lambard calls the Sax. huçbyçe, a time of scolding and huckering. From the Lambeth book, cited by Mr. Brand, under the years 1556-1557, there appear receipts for hoax-money. The Sax. hocep, huçop, also signified scorn, laughing to scorn, or contumely; and Chaucer's "wife of Simkin" is described

"ful of hoker and bismare," (i. e. insolence or mockery, and of abuse.)

Reve's Tale.] An imposition; a deception; as the hoax was credited beyond expectation.

To HOAX.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive; to impose upon.

HON.* n. s.

1. A clown. [German, hube, formerly hobe, a country-farm; hubner, a country fellow. Serenius.]

2. A fairy; a spirit. See HORGOLIN.

3. The back of the chimney. A northern

term. Grose. See HORNON.
HOA or NOB.* See HORNON.

HO'BRARD-DE-HOV.* n. s. [in some places

called hobbedehoy, and also hobbery- hoy.] A stripling; a young lad between fourteen and twenty-one; neither man nor boy.

Ma's age divided here ye have
By prentisshipp from birth to grave,
The first seven years bring up as a child:

The next to learning, for waxing too wilde:
The next keepe under Sir Hubbard-de-hoy.
The next a man, no longer a boy, &c.

Tusser, Husbandrie, &c. (1580), p. 57.

HO'BRIEM.* n. s. The opinions of Thomas

Hobbes of Malmesbury, in this country, who was born towards the close of the sixteenth century. He "made no scruple to speak of the light and law of nature as a chimera; and as little, to mould Christianity to a system of his own, directly repugnant to the nature and end of all religion; for he establishes it as a fundamental point, that the subjects of every community ought to conform, in all religious matters, to the commands of the civil magistrate. To this he added a frightful picture of human nature, representing mankind as altogether selfish and savage." Skelton,

Deism Revealed, Dial. viii. "His ethics have a strong tendency to corrupt our moral, and his politics to destroy that liberty which is the birthright of every human creature. He is commonly regarded as a sceptic in religion, and a dogmatist in philosophy; but he was a dogmatist in both." Granger, Biog.

Hist. Charles II. (l. ix.)

The abstractions of Hobdism must not stand up for it, without allowing themselves to be actuated only by base and narrow principles.

Skelton, Deism Revealed.

HO'BRIST.* n. s. A follower of the opi-

inions of Hobbes.

That Rochester should write a satire on man,
I am not surprised. It is the business of the libertine to degrade his species, and debate the dignity of human nature, and thereby destroy the most efficacious incentives to lovely and laudable actions. But, that a writer of Boileau's purity of manners should represent his kind in the dark and disagreeable colours he has done, with all the malice of a discontented Hobdism, is a lamentable perversion of fine talents, and is a real injury to society.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To HOBBLE.* v. n. [to hop, to hoppel,

to hobble. Dr. Johnson.—The disnitive of the Sax. Goth. hoppa, to hop, to leap, so happen, hobben, Teut.; hobbelu,

Cym. the same. Serenius.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and encumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryd.

Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling? Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to veraces, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans—had a custom of re-proaching each other in a sort of extempore poetry, or rather tumbling hobble verse.

Dryden, Orig. and Pr. of Satire.
While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles to alternate verse. Prior.

To HOBBLE.* v. a. [perhaps from hob- bel, a knot, Fland.; hobbelen, to complicate in a knot.] To perplex; to embarrass; as, he is greatly hobbled.

HO'BLE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Uneven awkward gait.

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. A difficulty. [hobbel, Fland. a knot.]

To get into a hobble.
HO'BLE.* n. s. [old French, hobeler;

"cavalier qui monte un cheval Escou-sois, qu'on nommoit anciennement hobin."

Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

1. A kind of horse-soldier.

For twenty hoblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid six-pence
a-piece per diem. Duice.

2. Men employed in towing vessels by a rope on the land. West of England,

Jenings.

HO'BLE.* adv. [from hobble.] Clumsily; awkwardly with a halting gait.

HO'BLY.* adj. [from hobble.] Rough uneven; as, a hobly road. Brockett,

N. Country Words.
HO'BLY.* n. s. [hobbij, Fland.; hobereau,
French; heboy, Welsh.]

1. A species of hawk.
They have such a horrid possession of the Valentine, as a hobly hath over a lark. Bacon.

The people will chop like trout at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby. J. Esturgen.

Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryd.

2. An Irish or Scottish horse; a pacing

horse; a nag. [Goth. hoppa, a horse;
hobin, Fr. a pacing horse. Dr. Johnson.

—Hobin, Irish, a horse whose motion is easy. Bullet. This, Dr. Jamieson thinks, may be from odann, Ir. quick, nimble. Nevertheless he reverts also to

Serenius likewise refers hobby, viz. Iceel.
hoppa, a mare; as Johnson has to the Goth. hoppa, a horse. This, I may add, carries us to the Greek trois.]

Hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies. Duice on Ireland.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

As young children, who are ty'd in

Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stranger,

Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap, per Adas, and scold.

On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

4. In colloquial language, that which is the favourite object or pursuit of a person. See HOBBY-HORSE.

HO'BRY-HORSE.* n. s.

1. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.
Those grave contenders about opinionative tribles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby-horse. Glenville.

2. A character in the old May-games.

The hobby-horse was represented by a man equipped with as much pasteboard as was sufficient to form the head and hinder parts of a horse, the quadruped defects being concealed by a long mantle or foot-cloth that nearly touched the ground. The performer on this occasion exerted all his skill in burlesque horsemanship. Duice.

But see the hobby-horse is forgot.
Fool! it must be your lot,

To supply his want with faces
And some other Indian graces.

R. Jonson, Masque of Althea.
The word politician is not usual to his man,
and thereupon he plays the most notorious hobby-horse, jereen and frisking in the luxury of his nomens. Milton, Coleridge.

3. A stupid or foolish person. [from the preceding sense.]

I have cited eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

Shakspeare.
4. The favourite object or pursuit of a person.

What the last age denominated folies, or hobby-horses, we style collections: Uncle Toby's library would have required no apology among the hunters of old ballads, and churchwardens' bills of our day!

Ferrus, illus. of Henry, ch. 5.
HOBGOBLIN † n. s. [according to Skinner, for hobgoblin, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin; but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblin, empeu, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys' play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg. Dr. Johnson.—Wallis maintains his opinion, in his Correction of Hobbes, with much stoutness: "This derivation you did, at first, cry out upon as very absurd; and you meant to pay me for it; till you were informed, as I hear, by some of your friends, that the scholiast of Aristophanes had the same, (viz. empeusa from ε and πει), and so have Eustathius, Erasmus, Cælius Rhodiginus, Stephanus, Scapula, Calepine, and others: and therefore you were advised not to quarrel with it. Whereupon, waving your main charge, you only tell me, that it doth not become my gravity to tell you, that empeusa, your demonium Atheniense, was a kind of hobgoblin, that hopped upon one leg; and that thence a boys' play, now in use, comes to be called ludus empeusa; and withal pray me to tell you, where it was that I read the word empeusa for the boys' play I spoke of? To the question I answer, that I read it so used in Junius's Nomenclator, Rider's, and Thomas's Dictionary; sufficient authors for such a business." Due Correction for Mr. Hobbes, Oxf. 1656. p. 24. Notwithstanding this learned etymology, it is, I think, plain that our ancestors considered the hobgoblin as no other than a Robin Goodfellow; and that, therefore, we may consider hob as the true etymon; hob, the goblin, i. e. Robin Goodfellow. See the example from Shakspeare's Mids. N. Dream. "A bigger kind there is of them (fairies) called with us hobgoblins, and Robin Goodfellow, that would in those superstitious times, grind corn for a morsel of milk, &c." Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47. Hence hob was also a general name for a fairy or spirit. "The hobs of night." Morall Plot of C. Wæ's Electra of Sophocles, 1649. "Hobthrust, or rather hob o' th' hurst, a spirit supposed to haunt woods only." North. Grose's Prov. Gloss. Hob Howland, the name of a spirit. Brand, Popular Antiq. ii. 359.] A fairy; vulgarly, a frightful one.

You are that shrewd and knavish spirit, Call'd Robin Goodfellow: —
 Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
 You do their work. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.
 Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
 Attend your office and your quality:
 Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy o'-yes. Shakspeare.
HO'BITT n. s. A small mortar to shoot little bombs.

HO'S LIKE * adj. [from hob.] Clownish; boorish.

Cotgrave, in V. Rude, and Sherwood.
HO'BNAIL † n. s. [from hobby and nail.]

1. A nail used in shoeing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, I beseech dove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hobnails.

We shall buy maidens as they buy hobnails, by the hundred. Shakspeare.

2. A clownish person, in contempt.

No stick hobnail at a morris, but is more handsomely facetious. Milton, Coleridge.

HO'BNAILED adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone, Would'st thou, to run the gamut, these expose To a whole company of hobnail's shoes?

Dryden, Jun.

HO'NOB † This is probably corrupted from hobnob by a coarse pronunciation. See HABNAB. Dr. Johnson.—Grose, in like manner, explains hobnob "as a venture, rashly," as a northern expression, and sometimes pronounced habnob. From him we learn also, that hob or hub is our northern name for the back of the chimney; and that the drinking phrase to hob or nob with a person, arose from beer being placed on the hob to warm, and cold beer being set on a small table called the nob; so that the original question, will you have hob or nob, meant, will you have warm or cold beer? This very improbable account has been somewhat refined in a work of great erudition. "It was customary for persons to pledge each other by taking their cups from the hobs or hubs and nobs, on which they were placed on each side of the fire-place."

Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 122. Mr. Brand's etymology and explanation are much more satisfactory; habban, Sax. to have, and nebban, to want. May it not therefore be explained in this sense, "Do you choose a glass of wine, or would you rather let it alone?" His incredulity at this moment is so implausible, that satisfaction can be none but by puns of death, and sepulchre; hob, nob, is his word; give'st or take'st.

HO'NOB * n. s. A wind instrument. See HAUTBOY. It is written hoboy, as if it were from the Italian oboy, which, as Pegge has observed, is exactly the pronunciation an Italian would give the French word hautbois; and has no meaning, as the French name has.

HO'NOB'S CHOICE * An expression often used denoting that kind of choice in which there is no alternative. The caprice of Hobson, the Cambridge carrier, who died in 1630, is said to have given rise to it.

Hobson kept a stable of forty good cattle, always ready and fit for travelling; but when a man came for a horse, he was led into the stable, where there was great choice, but he obliged him to take the horse next to the stable door; so that every customer was alike well-served according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice: From whence it became a proverb, when what ought to be your election was forced upon you, to say, Hobson's choice. Spectator, No. 509.

HO'ATHURST, or HO'ATHURST * n. s. An hobgoblin, sometimes called Robin Goodfellow; supposed, according to Grose, to haunt woods only; hob o' th' hurst. See HOBGOBLIN. A northern word. Formerly used for a clown also, a rustic.

Both can easily pardon the mistake of this rude writer, nor are at all surprised at it as a novelty, that any ignorant rural Adelphus should call the spirit of nature (a thing so much beyond his capacity to judge of) a prodigious hobgoblin. Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682) p. 91.

HOCK n. s. [hog, hoh, Saxon.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock. See HOGGIN.

To HOCK v. a. [from the noun.] To disabill in the hock.

HOCK } n. s. [from Hockheim on HO'CKAMORE, the Maine.] Old strong Rhenish wine.

Rector's the fainting high and mighty,
 With brandy, wine, and apud rite;
 And made 'em stoutly overcome
 With beerish, hockamore and mumm. Hudibras.
 Wine becomes sharp, as hock, like vitriolic acidity.

If cyder royal should become unpleasant, and as unfit to bottle as old hockamore, mix one hogshead of that and one of tart new cyder together.

Mortimer.

HO'CKEY, or HA'WKY * n. s. [hock, German, heach, Sax. high, i. e. festival.] A name for harvest-home, used in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire, according to Pegge; and certainly in other places. Hockey cake is that which is distributed to the people at harvest-home. The hockey cart is that which brings the last corn and the children rejoicing with boughs in their hands, with which the horses are also attired. Salmon's Survey, Hertfordshire, cited in Brand's Popular Antiquities.

Hockey is brought Home with solemnity. Poor Robin's Alm. 1676. In the town of Cambridge, and centre of our University, such curious remains of ancient customs may be noticed, in different seasons of the year, which pass without observation. The custom of blowing horns on the first of May (old style) is derived from a festival in honour of Diana. At the Acoustic, as it is called, I have seen a clown dressed in woman's clothes, having his face painted, his head decorated with ears of corn, and bearing about him other symbols of Ceres, carried in a waggon, with grey pomp and loud shouts through the streets, the horses being covered with white sheets; and when I enquired the meaning of the ceremony, was answered by the people that they were drawing the harvest-quern.

Dr. Clarke's Tracts.

HO'CKHERB n. s. [hock and herb.] A plant; the same with mallows. Ainsworth.

To HO'CKLE † v. a. [from hock.]

1. To hamstring; to cut the sinews about the ham or hough. Hammer.

2. To mow. Applied only to stubble. Mason.

HOCUS POCUS † [The original of this word is referred by Tilletson to a form of the Romish church. Junius derives is from hooed, Welsh, a cheat, and pote or pocus, a bag; jugglers using a bag for conveyance. It is corrupted from some words that had once a meaning, and which perhaps cannot be discovered. Dr. Johnson. — Archbishop Tillotson's remark is, that "in all probability those common juggling words of hocus pocus are nothing else but a corruption of hoc est corpus, by way of ridiculous imitation of the priests of the church of Rome in their trick of transubstantiation." Serm. xxvi. Pegge notices the corruption as arising from the illiteracy of some Romish priests, who themselves pronounced, in a gabbling manner, the proper words as if they were hocus pocus. Anecd. of the Eng. Language. — I subscribe neither to this, nor to the archbishop's observation; and have often wondered that such a man as Tillotson should have given publicity to his opinion. Mr. Turner, in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, considers it as descended from Ochus Bochus, a magician and demon of the northern mythology; and refers us to the authority of Verelius. From Verelius we derive further information, that this personage's name was in use among the Italian conjurers, "histrionibus Italis hodieque notum: Ochus Bochus, carmina prestat" Verelii Epitome Hist. Suio-Goth. 4to. 1750. p. 13. This was known to Dr. Johnson; and, had it been known to Tillotson, would have saved his remark, which has been repeated in abundance of books.]

1. A juggler.

I will speak of one man more excelling in that craft than others, that went about in king James his time, and long since, who called himself "the king's majesty's most excellent hocus pocus" and so was he called, because that, at the playing of every trick, he used to say, "hocus pocus, totius talentus, vade celeriter jubas," a dark compote of words to blind the eyes of beholders. Bay's Cantile in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 29. Boy: Do you think this pen can juggle? I would we had Hokus pokus for 'em then, your people; or Traviano Tudeoko.

Tham. Who's that, boy?

Boy. Another juggler with a long name.

B. Johnson, Magn. Lady.

Dancing-wench, hocus pocus, and other antics past thy remembrance.

Sir T. Herbert, Tron. p. 154.

2. A juggle; a cheat; the words formerly used by conjurers in practising their tricks.

Right and wrong

Could never hold it out so long.
And, like blind fortune, with a sleight
Convey men's interest and right
From Shille's pocket into Nuke's.

As easily as hocus pocus. Hudibras, iii. iii.

If thou hast any hocus pocus tricks to play, why can't art do them here? Adrian, Dreamer.

To Hocus, or To Hocus-Pocus. * To Hocus. A low expression.

This gift of hocus pocus, and of disguising matters, is surprising. L. Extrange.
One of the greatest pieces of legendarism, with which these jugglers affect the vulgar and incautious of the present age. Nelson.

HOD.† n. s. [corrupted perhaps in contempt from hood, a hod being carried on the head. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps a corruption of hoved or heaved, that which is carried: the trough is carried on the shoulders, not on the head. Or from the French hotte, a basket to carry on the back. V. Cotgrave in HOTTE.] A kind of trough in which a labourer carries mortar to the mason.

A fork and a look to be tampering in clay.
A lath, hammer, trowel, a hod or a tray. Tusser.

HO'DDY. * adj. Well; pleasant; in good spirits. A southern expression. Grose.

HO'DDY-DO'DDY. * n. s. A word of contempt, denoting an awkward, foolish, or ridiculous person.

Co's wife, and you,
That make your husband such a hoddly-doddy.
R. Johnson, Every Man in his Humour.

He has more goodness in his little finger, than you have in your whole body:

My master is a personable man, and not a spindle-shank'd hoddly-doddy.

Swiff, Goodman's Lett. to Dr. Sheridan.

HO'DMAN. n. s. [hod and man.] A labourer that carries mortar.

HO'DMAN-DOD.† n. s.

HO'GSBEANS.

HO'GSBEAD.

HO'GSFENNEL.

HO'GSNURROMS.

HO'GSHEAD † n. s. [supposed to be so called; says Minshieu, from the form or shape; but more probably from the Dutch ogshoofd, and ogshoofd, from og, the name of a certain measure in Brabant, and houden, to contain. See Minshieu in V. HOGSHEAD.]

1. A measure of liquids containing sixty-three gallons.

Varro tells, that every jugum of vines yielded six hundred urns of wine; according to this proportion, our acre should yield fifty-five hogsheads, and a little more.

2. Any large barrel.

Blow strongly with a pair of bellows into a hogshead, putting into it before that which you would have preserved; and in the instant that you withdraw the bellows, stop the hole. Bacon. They slung up one of their largest hogsheads: I drank it off; for did not hold half a pint.

HO'GSHEARING. * n. s. [hog and shear.] A ludicrous term, denoting much ado about nothing.

Why do I hold you thus long in these his noisome exhalations, and hideous cry of hogshearing, where, as you say in my Engaged, we have a great deal of noise, and no wool.

Deen Maria, Lett. (1692), p. 95.

HO'GSTER. * n. s. [hog and steer, Saxon, reop, a young bullock.] A wild boar of three years old.

HO'GSTY. * n. s. [hog and sty.] The place in which swine are shut to be fed.

HO'GWASH. * n. s. [hog and wash.] The draft which is given to swine.

Your butler purloins your liquor, and the brewer sells you hogwash.

HO'IDEN. † n. s. [hoeden, Welsh; femina levisior fama, Latin. Dr. Johnson.

— Skinner derives it from the Teut. heyde, a country place, q. d. a rusticity; and, with probability, as hoiden is not confined to the female sex. Cotgrave and Sherwood give us the male hoiden. "Badaudi, a fool, dolt, flop, ass, coxcomb, gaping hoydon." Again, Sherwood translates his "rude hoiden" into the French falsourdin, which Cotgrave converts into "a lubberly slob, a heavy sot, a lumpish hoydon." This sense was not known to Dr. Johnson, though Milton also uses it; and indeed of the female hoiden he has given no example. The word, in my opinion, was first applied to men. It occurs repeatedly in Cotgrave with such application, but not to women.]

1. An awkward, rude, ill-behaved man. Shall I argue of conversation with this hoyden, so go and practise at his opportunities in the larder?

2. An ill-taught, awkward, country girl.

All those [women] we saw, were the ugliest awkward hoydens in nature.

HO'IDEN. * adj. Rustick; inelegant; untaught.

This holdeth not in the sea-coasts. Bacon.

The lasting of plants is most in those that are largest of body; as oak, elm, and chestnut, and this holdeth in trees; but in herbs it is often contrary. Bacon.

When the religion formerly received is rent by discords, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect; if then also there should arise any extraordinary and strange spirit, to make himself author thereof; all which points held when Malomet published his law. Bacon.

Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of the colours of good and evil, showing in what cases they hold,
and in what they deceive. Bacon.

Where outward force constrains, the sentence holds;

But who constrains me? Milton, S. A.

Nine of his solutions will hold by mere mecha-

Earth's hollownesses, which the world's lungs are,

Have no more wind than the upper vault of air.
Donne, Poems, p. 144.

An heap of sand or fine powder will suffer no
hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.

Thy youngest daughter does out love the least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sound
Reverberates no hollowness. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

People, young and raw, and soft nurtured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's;

but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the base and ingratulity of almost all,
they will then find that a friend is the gift of God,
and that he only who made hearts can unite them.

South.

HOLLOWROOT. n. s. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HOLLY. n. s. [holeyn, Sax.] A tree.

The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some variegated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Miller.

Faint blossoms drop with every blast;
But the brown beauty like holly lasts. Gey.

Some to the holly bend
Needing repair, and to the thicket come;
Some to the rude protection of the thorn. Thomson.

HOLLYHOCK. n. s. [holihoc, Saxon, commonly called holyoak.] Roseholme. It is in every respect larger than the common mallow. Miller.

Hollyhock far exceed poppies for their durableness, and are very ornamental. Martineau.

HOLLYROSE-†

HOLLYTRE. n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.

Why, holly-rose, dost thou of slender frame,
Aod without scent, assume a rose's name?

Tate's Cowley.

HOLM-† n. s.

1. A river-island; an islet. [Goth. holm, holm; Sax. holm; Dan. holm.] In the north of England, holms are low lands near a river. It is sometimes pronounced, and written, hown. Where holm is the name of a place, or where it is joined with another word, it usually signifies a place surrounded with waters; but if water be not near the place, it may signify hilly; the Saxon word, according to Camden, meaning also a hill or mountain.

A little higher up the river was a holm, which divided it into two branches. Vallentyne, Trav. iii. 295.

2. The ilex; the evergreen oak. [Sax.
hollen, holly; the leaves of one sort of the evergreen oak are called holly-leaved.]

Under what tree didst thou take them companying together? who answered, under a holm tree. Hist. of Sus. vet. 58.

The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sawed. Spenser, F. Q.

HOLMEN.* adj. [from holm.] Made of holm. West of England. Jennings.

HOLLOCAUST. n. s. [Sax. and holo.] A burnt sacrifice; a sacrifice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and no thing retained by the offerer.

Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which belong an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burnt sacrifice for a boy. Bacon.

Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice; let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an offering; let the hand do no
unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust.

Ray on the Creation.

Eumenides cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice.

HOL'LOGRAPHI. n. s. [ἅγιος and γράφω.] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether, by the grantor's own hand.

HOLP. The old preterite and participle passive of help.

His great love, sharp as his spur, hulp him
To's house before us. Shakespeare.

HOL'PEN.† The old preterite and participle passive of help.

He hath holpen his servant Israel.

St. Luke, i. 54.
In a long trunk the sound is holpen, though both the mouth and the ear be a handful from the trunk; and somewhat more holpen when the hearer is near, than when the speaker. Bacon.

HOL'LYSTER. n. s. [hol, teol, Sax. a hiding place.] A case for a horseman's pistol.

Into his rusty holster put what meat
Into his bow he could not get. Bulwer.

To HOL'LYSTER. v. n. To bustle; to make a disturbance. West of England. Grose.

HOLTY. n. s. [at the beginning or ending of the name of any place, holt signifies that it is or hath been woody, or sometimes possibly from the Saxon hol, i. e. hollow, especially when the name ends in tun or dun, Gibson.—

Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Sax. helan, to cover; holled, hol'd, holt; a rising ground or knoll covered with trees. Div. of Parl. ii. 383. Serenius, long before, had made a similar deduction from the Goth. and Icel. hulja, hodia, to cover. We also use this word, however, simply for a hill, without any reference to its covering, but rather with the meaning of bleak or barren. In this case, perhaps, the Icel. holt, a rough and barren place, is the etymon.]

1. A wood; a grove; a forest. The word is still thus used in many parts of England. Cherry holt, a plantation of cherry-trees. Norfolk.

These holts, and these hays,
That hat in winter dead yben and drie,
Herehest hem in grene, when that May is.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. iii. 355.
The wilde forest, the clothed holts with grame,
Id. Surrey, Songs, &c. p. 10.

A grove, hol, or wood of such trees.

2. A hill.

O'er holt and heath
We went, through deserts waste, and forests wild.

Buffum, Tass. viii. 12.
Underneath the holts to hoar.

Old Poem cited by Percy, Rel. Anc. Poet. v. 1. Gloss.
Id. Surrey, Songs, &c. p. 10.

He, whose rustic neck
O'er heath and craggy holt her wing display'd.

Id.

HOL'LY. adj. [haly, Saxon; heyligh, Dutch, from hal, healthy, or in a state of salvation.]

1. Good; pious; religious.

See where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

And see a book of prayer in his hand,
True ornaments to know a holy man.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable.

And, doubting that, most holy. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. Hallowed; consecrated to divine use. [Sax. halsa; Icel. heilaga, from hala, to praise. Serenius.]

State, holy or unshallow'd, what of that? Shaks.
Bare was his hoary head; one holy hand
Held forth his laurel crown, and one his sceptre.

Dryden.

3. Pure; immaculate.

Common sense could tell them, that the good
God could not be pleased with any thing cruel;
nor the most holy God with any thing filthy and unclean.

South.

4. Sacred.

An evil soul producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
He has down'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phœbus' car. Shaks. Ant. and. Cloy.

HOLY-CROSS DAY. n. s. The fourteenth of September. See HOLY-ROOD.

HOLY-GHOST. n. s. [haly and gast, Sax.] The third person of the adorable Trinity.

If strength of persuasion be the light which must guide us, I ask, how shall any one distinguish the inspirations of the Holy Ghost?

Locke.

HOLY ONE. n. s. [holy and one.] 1. One of the appellations of the Supreme Being, by way of emphasis; applied also to God the Son.

I am the Lord, your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King. Isaiah, chiv. 15.

I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. St. Luke, iv. 34.

Nor from the Holy One of Heaven
Refrained his tongue blasphemous. Milton, P. L.

2. One separated to the service of God.

And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummin and thy Urim be with thy holy one. Deut. xxxiii. 8.

Though by holy one be principally meant the high priests, — yet it comprehends all the rest of the priests and Levites in conjunction with him.

Patrick.

HOLY-ROOD DAY. n. s. The old festival, called also Holy-Cross day; instituted on account of the recovery of a large piece of the Cross, by the emperor

Heraclius, after it had been taken away, on the plundering of Jerusalem by Cosroes, king of Persia, about the year of Christ 615; the fourteenth day, of September.

Brand.
This day, they say, is called holy-rood day,
And all the youth are now a nutting gone.

Com. of Germ the Collier of Croydon.

HOLY-THURSDAY. n. s. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, ten days before Whitsuntide.

HOLY-WEEK. n. s. The week before Easter, in which the passion of our Redeemer is commemorated.

HOLYDAY. n. s. [holy and day.] 1. The day of some ecclesiastical festival.

The histories, which were writ before the reformation, do frequently speak of transactions happening upon such a holy-day, or about such a time, without mentioning the month; relating one thing to be done at Lammas-tide, and another about Martlemas, &c. so that were these names quite left out of the calendar, we might be at a loss to know when several of these transactions happened.

Whately on the Comm. Prayer.

2. Anniversary feast.

This victory was so welcome unto the Persians, that in memorial thereof they kept that day as one of their solemn holidays for many years after.

Knolles, Hist.
Rome's holidays you tell, as if a guest
With the old Romans you were wont to feast.

Waller.

3. A day of gaiety and joy.

My approach has made a little holy-day,
And every face was dress'd in smiles to meet me.

Rover, Jane Shore.

4. A day of rest from ordinary occupation.

Suppose you had a mind to persuade Mr. Maittaire to give you a holy-day? would you bluntly say to him, give me a holy-day?

Ed. Chatterfield.

HOLYDAY. adj.

1. Befitting a holiday; gay; cheerful.

Headbands, holyday clothes, and veils, glasses, and scarfs, Knights, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 7.

What, have I scaped love-letters in the holyday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare, Merry. Wives of Windsor.

Courage is but a holyday kind of virtue, to be seldom exercised. Dryden.

HOM'AGE. n. s. [homage, Fr.; homagium, low Latin.]

1. Service paid and fealty professed to a sovereign or superior lord.

Call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects.

Shakespeare.
The chief, in a solemn manner, did their homages and made their oaths of fidelity to the earl marshal. Ducies.

2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.

The gods' great mother, when her heavenly race
Do homage to her. Deidamia.

A turf of daisies on a flowery lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made.

And due obedience to the dairy paid. Dryden.
Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, like dogs beneath your masters' feet!

Dryden.

To HOM'AGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.

HOM'AGEABLE. adj. [from homage.] Subject to homage.

Of them two, he of Holland, being homageable to none, — was the more potent.

Huvel, Lett. i. ii. 15.

For which he is homageable to the crown of France. Huvel, Lett. i. vi. 12.

HOM'NAGER. n. s. [homnager, French, from homage.] One who holds by homage to a superior lord.

Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's traitor. Shakespeare.

His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Brereton, his homnager. Brereton, Mem. F. H.

HOM'E. n. s. [hann, Sax. The past participle of hman, coire. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 347. A word, however, as Serenius has observed, of the highest antiquity; haim, M. Goth. a village, a town; heim, Su. Goth. a house, a mansion; and probably primitive. Wælcet views it as derived from heima, to cover, to shield.]

1. His own house; the private dwelling.

I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Shakespeare.

Something like home that is not home is to be desired; it is found in the house of a friend.

Temple.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife.

Dryden.

When Hector went to see
His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,
He found her not at home; for she was gone.

Dryden.

Those who have home, when home they do repair,
To a last lodging call their waul'd ring friends.

Dryden.

2. His own country.

How can tyrants wisely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? Shaks.
Their determination is to return to their home,
and to trouble you no more.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

With honour to his home let Theseus ride,
With love to friend.

Dryden.

And factions soulders are weary'd into peace. Dryden.
They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury.

3. The place of constant residence.

Florida, by plenty made the home of war,
Shall sweep her crime, and bow to Charles rear'd.

Prior.

4. Home, united to a substantive, signifies domestic, or of the same country.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign.

Bacon.

HOME,† adv. [from the noun.]

1. To one's own habitation.

One of Adam's children is the mountain lights on a glittering substance; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.

2. To one's own country.

Men in distant regions raise,
To bring polite manners home. Gay, Feb. 14.

Gay.

3. Close to one's own house, or affairs.

He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself.

L'Estrange.

This is a consideration that comes home to our interest. Addison.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, you will, by particular application, bring home to your own concern. Wake, Prep. for Death.

4. To the point designed; to the utmost;

closely; fully.

Crafty enough either to bide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home.

Sylvest.

With his prepared arrow he charges home;
My unsupplied body. Shakspeare, A. Lear.

A loyal sir

To him then follow 't: I will pay thy graces
home both in word and deed. Shakspeare.

Accuse him home and home. Shakspeare.

Men of age object too much, adventure too little,
and seldom drive business home to the full period;
but content themselves with a mediocrity of success.

Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection home. Snodgrass.

Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him.

Addison.

He makes choice of some piece of morality;
and, in order to press this home, he makes less use of reasoning. Broom.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point.

Atterbury.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.

Poison may be false;
The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure.

Dryden.

I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

1. Native; natural. [home and born.]

Though he be thus elemented, arm
These creatures from homeborn intrinsic harm.

Danne.

2. Domestic; not foreign.

With homeborn lyes, or tales from foreign lands.

Page.

3. Native; natural. [home and bred.]

God hath taken care to anticipate every man, to draw him early into his church, before other competitors, homebred lusts, or vicious customs of the world, should be able to pretend to him.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

4. Not polished by travel; plain; rude; artless; uncultivated.

Only to me two homebred youths belong.

Dryden.

5. Domestic; not foreign.

But if of danger, which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tidings tell. Spenyer, F. Q.

By homebred fury rent, long groni'd. Philips.

6. HOMEVELT,† adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now. Milton, Comm.

Happy next him, who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Page.

7. HOMEKEEPING,* adj. [home and keep.] Staying at home.

Homekeeping youths have ever *home*ly wit.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Fer.

8. HOMELESS,* adj. [home and less.] Wanting a home; having no home.

Homeless, rudely. Homeless, rudely.

9. HOMELESS,† n. s. [from *home*ly.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness. Originally, management; care of home.

So "Grisild's wifely homelessness." Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

Coarse tapestry may, afar off, show well;
which, when it comes to be close view'd, discovers an homelessness in texture and faults enough, both in shapes and colours. Sp. Hall, Rom. p. 51.

Humor has opened a great field of railway to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homelessness of some of his sentiments.

Addison.

10. HOMEY,† adj. [from home.] And at first this adjective signified what related to home or household. "The enemies of a man be they that ben *home*ly with hym." Wicliffe, St. Matt. x. 36. "They of his own household." Pres. Version.

Plain; homespun; not elegant; not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude. It is used both of persons and things.

Each place harbours without curiosity, and *home*ly without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water mildly tumbling down;
Whereby approached not in any wise
The *home*ly shepherd nor the ruler clown. Spenyer.

Like rich hangings in an *home*ly house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakspeare.

Be plain, good sons, and *home*ly in thy drift:

Riddling confession and but riddling shift. Shakspeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever *home*ly wit. Shakspeare.

Our stomachs will make what's *home*ly savoury. Shakspeare.

It is for *home*ly features to keep home; Shakspeare.

They had their name thence. Milton, Comm.

It is observed by some, that there is none so *home*ly but loves a looking-glass. South.

Their *home*ly fare d' spites the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next. Dryden.

Now Shakespeare daily entertains
His Chloe in the *home*liest strains. Swift.

*Home*ly persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clarendon.

HOMEY,† adv. Plainly; coarsely; rudely.

It is a beautiful child; *home*ly brought up.
In a rude hostility. J. Jonson, New Tan.

Thus like the god his father, *home*ly drest,
He strides into the hall a horrid guest. Dryden.

HOMEYLYN, n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HOME MADE,† adj. [home and made.] Made at home; not manufactured in foreign parts.

A tax laid on your native product, and home- made commodities, makes them yield less to the first seller.

HOME, n. s. A Hebrew measure of about three pints.

An home of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. Jer. xxvii. 16.

HOME SPEAKING,* n. s. [home and speak.] Forceful and efficacious speech.

Our Saviour, who had all gifts in him, was Lord to express his indomitable power in what sort him best seemed; sometimes by a mild and familiar discourse; sometimes with plain and impartial *home*speaking. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

HOME SPUN,† adj. [home and spun.]

1. Spun or wrought at home; not made by regular manufacturers.

Instead of *home*spun cloths, were seen
Good pinners, edg'd with colbertens. Swift.

2. Not made in foreign countries.

He appeared in a suit of English broad cloth, very plain, but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, *home*spun ware. Addison.

3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; inelegant.

They sometimes put on, when they go abroad,
long, sleeveless coats of *home*spun cotton.

Sandys, Trav.

We say, in our *home*spun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone. Dryden.

Our *home*spun suitors must forsake the field,
And Shakspeare to the wolf Scarlati yield.

Addison.

HOME SPUN, n. s. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustic man. Not in use.

What *home*spun *home*spun have we swaggering here,

So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakspeare.

HOME STALL,† n. s. [ham and trebe, HOME STALL,† SAXON.] The place of the house; including sometimes a small portion of land adjoining the house.

I do not see thee led into the market-place, or any other part of the city, or thy *home*stead of Nazareth, but into the vast wilderness.

Sp. Hall, Contemp. Christ tempted.

Both house and *home*stead into seas are borne,
And rocks are from their old foundations torn.

Dryden.

Through every *home*stead and through every yard
(His midnight walks) panting, forlorn he flies.

Somerville.

HOM'EWARD. } adv. [ham and peap; H. HOM'EWARDS. } Saxon.] Towards home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare.
Since such love's native station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ob on with them who homeward go.

Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;

And O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth! Milton, Lycidas.
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and clear the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures borrow,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safe haven. Dryden.

HOMICIDE. n. s. [homicide, French, homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood; contrist this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but contrist it in reference to the law of the Jews, shoot which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder 't that that black destruction drives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicide, Latin.] A murderer; a manslayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet house.
— If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.

HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage the king oppress. Pope.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [homiletic.] Social; conversable.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirement, severe; his virtuous active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster. Athenberg, Character of Luther.

HOMILIST.* n. s. [from homily.] One who preaches to a congregation.

To this good homilist I have ever been stubborn. Brown, and Fl. Scornful Lady.

The plainest Christian homilist, speaking as the oracles of God. Hard's Works, vol. 8: p. 124.

HOMILY. n. s. [homily, Fr. homilie.] A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings used in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, Have patience, good people! Shakespeare, As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hawmond, Fundam.

HOMOGENEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. HOMOGENEUS. } adj. homogène.] Having the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is by concretion of homogeneous parts. Bacon.
Ice is a similiary body, and heterogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

HOMOGENEALNESS. } n. s. [from homogene-
HOMOGENEITY. } neous or homog-
HOMOGENEOUSNESS. } neal.] Participation of the same principles or nature; similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity or homogeneity of parts.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the secreted liquors. Cheyne.

HOMOGENY. n. s. [homogénia.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part retureth to its nature or homogeneity. Bacon.

HOMOLOGOUS. adj. [homologue, French; homologue.] Having the same manner or proportions.

Comparing the homologous or corresponding members on both sides.

Sp. Berkeley, Analyst. § 59.

HOMOXYMOUS. adj. [homonymy, French; homonymie.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous; having a common name for several things, but having a different definition of each by the explanation of that name for each.

It is a rule in art, that words which are homonymy, of various and ambiguous significations, ought ever in the first place to be distinguished.

Sp. Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 13.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymy, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation. Watts, Logic.

HOMOXYMY. n. s. [homonymie, French; homonymie.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

Shun homonymy, and — state the question. Shelford, Learned Discourses, (1635,) p. 121.

The devil earthly himself in an homonymy, as a fox is the ground; if he be stopped at one hole, he will get out at another.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 272.

HOMOTONOUS. adj. [homotónous.] Equable; said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension.

Quincy.

HONE. n. s. [This word M. Casaubon derives from hōnē; Junius from hōnen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from hien, Saxon, a stone; hennan, to stone; Scerenius, from the Icel. heini, a whetstone.] A whetstone.

A hone and a pruner, to pare away grass. Tasso.
These snakes they make to shed changelings
Of all the folks they list on;
They turned barbers into hons,
And namons into hons.

Bulld of St. George for England.
To HONE.† v. n. [old Fr. hoigner, to whine; Su. Goth. hōnjan.] To whine. See TO WHINE.

His heart is still with her, to talk of her, admiring, and commending her, lamenting, hōning, wishing himself any thing for her sake.

HONEST.† adj. [honeste, Fr.; honestus, Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

— A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Shakespeare.

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no further to his health. Temple.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts, Logic.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shaks.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day.

He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay. Tate.

4. Creditable; honourable.

It is not honest, it may not advance. Chauc. C.T.P.
No manner of art that was honest.

Sir T. Flyet, God. fol. 49. b.
Let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, [in the margin, honest honest trades.] Titus, iii. 14.

5. Well-looking; jolly; open. [Lat. honestus.]

Bacchus ever fair and young; — Flush'd with a purple grace, Dryden, Alex. Fount.
He shews his honest face.

The strong labours of ox, of honest fellow.

Thomson, Summer.

6. HONEST FELLOW. An ironical expression, as good-fellow is sometimes used; denoting a jovial companion.

I was five hours with three merry, and two honest fellows. The former sang catches; and the latter even died with laughing at the noise they made. — Says one of the honest fellows, — let us drink aloud. We did so from seven of the clock until eleven! Tatler, No. 45.

To HONEST.* v. a. [Lat. honesto.] To adorn; to grace; to credit.

He also did honest and honour the men with his presence. Alp. Sidney, Sem. fol. 159.

You have very much honoured my lodging with your presence. B. Jonson, Epigr.

To HONESTATE.* v. a. [Lat. honestatus.]

To honour. Not in use. Cockeram.

HONESTATION.* n. s. [Lat. honestatio.]

Adornment; grace.

Many courtiers have brought out with them much of this precious melt of human prudence and sagacity, by which virtuous qualities and assurances they have been more happy than others in their applications to move the minds of men.

W. Montague, Dec. Ess. P. I. (1648,) p. 119.

HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. B. Jonson.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the public service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modesty.

HO'NEST.† n. s. [honestest, Fr. honestas, Lat.]

1. Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
— Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower.

Shakespeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men profess their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty, though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem.

Temple.

2. Honour; credit.

For the honesty of your shooting.

Ascham, Triumph. B. I.

You looked some time to have had honesty, pleasures, and commodities.

Bp. Ridley, Farewell to his Friends.

3. Frankness; liberality.

A noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. — Every man has his fault, and honesty is his.

Shakespeare, Tim. of Ath.

HONEY. n. s. [huny, Saxon honi, Dutch; hones, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell; it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure; and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis, or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb is destined for the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Rel. Hist.
In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours.

Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot.

L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable saps, resolved of the bile, balsamick and pectored: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Aruth.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk, we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness; a name of tenderness. [Met; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Sew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
O'er the nasty sty. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

HO'NEY-BAG. n. s. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter.

Grew, Museum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. s. [honey and comb.]

The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd.

Dryden.

HO'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.]

Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

Wicman.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. s. [honey and dew.]

Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects.

Martiner.

How honey-dews enshroud the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn.

Garrh.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. s. [melanthus, Lat.]

A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name.

Miller.

HO'NEY-ONAT. n. s. [melio, Latin; honey and onat.]

An insect.

Ainsworth.

HO'NEY-HARVEST. n. s. [honey and harvest.]

Honey collected.

Bees—haunt the fields, and bring
Their honey-harvest home.

Dryden, Ovid.

HO'NEY-MOON.† n. s. [honey and moon.]

The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

And now their honey-moon, that late was clear,
Doth pale, obscure, and tedious appear.

Corneille, (1612).

A man should keep his fiery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over.

Addison.

HO'NEY-MONTH.* n. s. [honey and month.]

The honey-moon.

Sometimes the parties fly asunder even in the midst of courtship, and sometimes grow cool in the very honey-moon.

HO'NEY-MOUTHED.* adj. [honey and mouth.]

Flattering; using honied words.

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best; I'll take't upon me:
If I prove honey-mouthed, let my tongue blister.

Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

HO'NEY-STALK.* n. s. Clover-flower.

Johnson.

With words more sweet and yet more dangerous,
Than balms to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep.

Titus Andronicus.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE.† n. s. [coprifolium, Lat.]

1. Woodbine; the plant.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Did her steel into the plashed bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbidden the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by prizes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it.

Shakespeare.

With ivy enopled, and interweave
With flouting honeysuckle.

Milton, Comus.

2. The flower or blossom of the woodbine.

Woodbine that beareth the honeysuckle.

Barrett, Alt. (1580.)

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwine.

Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

A honey-suckle,

The amorous woodbine's offspring.

Sicily and Naples, or The Fatal Union, (1640.)

Then mallow beat, and honeysuckles pond;

With these alluring savours sweet the ground.

Dryden.

HO'NEY-SWEET.* adj. Sweet as honey.

The virtuous quiete,

That is in marriage honey-sweet.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Saint.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

HO'NEY-TONGUED.* adj. [honey and tongue.]

Using soft speech.

This is the flower that smiles on every one,

To show his teeth as white as whilom bone;

And consciences, that will not die in death,

Pay him the due of honey-tongu'd Boyet.

A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart!

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. s. [cerinthe, Lat.]

A plant.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.]

Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,

And leave them honeyless.

Shakespeare.

HO'NIED.† adj. [from honey.]

It is an adjective of frequent occurrence in our old poets; but it is not confined to them; for the admirable author of the Christian Life has also adopted it.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honeyed thigh,

That at her flowery work doth sing.

Milt. Il Pens.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a honey'd libation, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton, S. A.
The Grecian sophists, as Plutarch tells us, by their sighing tones, and honied words, and effeminate phrases and accents, did very often transport their auditors into a kind of factitious enthusiasm. Scott, Works, II. 129.

HON'IEDNESS. * n. s. [from honied.] Sweetness; allurement. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

HON'ORARY. adj. [honourarius, Lat.]

1. Done in honour; in honour.
There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.
This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Confering honour without gain.
The Romans adorned with little honorary rewards, that without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HON'OUR. n. s. [honour, French; honor, old French and Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.
I will promote thee unto very great honour. Numer. xxii. 17.

2. Reputation; fame.
A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not now used, Dr. Johnson says. It was applied, however, in his time, as it is now, to the Master of the Rolls; and now also to the great law-officer, of modern appointment, called the Vice-Chancellor.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour and myself are at one;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakespeare.

4. Subject of praise.
Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them
honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserved thee. Shakespeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.
Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
— That which upholds him, and that which upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakespeare.
If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the repute and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.
They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakspeare.
His Grace of Canterbury,
Win holds his state at court, amongst pursuivants.
— His? 'tis he, indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another? Shakspeare.
This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour-flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakespeare.

8. Dignity of mien.
Two of far colder shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton, P. L.

9. Glory; boast.
A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet, Theory.

10. Public mark of respect.
He saw his friends, who welch'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd of their quiet graves. Dryden, Æn.
Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.
Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to keep together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain so honour, that at best can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Watts, Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.
Henry the seventh, truly plying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restored to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakespeare.
Honours were conferred upon Antoine by Haidari in his infancy. Watson, Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities paid.
Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.
The size then shock the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Seignior; lordship.
Being his majesty's steward of his majesty's honour and manor of Woodstock.
Ld. Clarendon, Life Contin. III. 949.

15. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.
My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shakespeare.

To HON'OUR. v. a. [honorer, French;
honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.
He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Eth. xvi. 11.
The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Eccles. x. 30.
He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? Eccles. x. 31.
How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not.
Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.
We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd.
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakespeare.

3. To glorify.
I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh and upon all his host; that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

HON'OURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.
Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Isa. xliii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.
Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakespeare.

3. Confering honour.
Think't thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shakespeare.
Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.
Sith this wretched woman overcame,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom,
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser, F. Q.

5. Not to be disgraced.
Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman! — let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakespeare.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.
As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this,
that he took Jeppo for an haven. 1 Mac. xiv. 5.
Methinks I could not die with more so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just, and his quarters honourable. Shakespeare.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.
The end sent him to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it. They answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself
they would most thankfully colour it. Hayward.
If thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose mairing, send me word tomorrow. Shakespeare.

8. Equitable.
HON'OURABLENESS. n. s. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity; dignity; honesty.

My next place, of the honourableness of marriage amongst all, he smooths over with a pretended concession.
Sp. Holl. Hen. of the Mare. Clergy, p. 108.
Peter, moved with the patriarch's persuasions, the equity and honourableness of the cause, — took the whole business upon him. Fuller, Holy War, p. 11.

To spread the fame of the Gospel in the world;
to make it appear lovely in the eyes of all beholders; and to allure them to submit to the honourableness, the gentleness, the civility of its yoke. Spirit, Hist. R. Soc. p. 566.

The dignity of the office, and honourableness of the employment. Eichard, Gr. of Const. of the Clergy, p. 126.

HON'OURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.
The reverend albot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Shakespeare.

2. Magnanimously; generously.
After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and condemned. Bacon.

3. Respectably; with exemption from reproach.
'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve;
Why did I not more honourably starve? Dryden.

HO'NOUR.† n. s. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

First, for what concerns our own church: it was a sincere honourer and approver of it.

Ward, Life of Dr. Henry More, p. 165.

HO'NOURLESS.* adj. [honour and less.] Without honour; not honoured.

That religion, which renders void the first precept of my text, by taking away the "fear of God," will always be for introducing a form of government which renders void the second; by taking away all "honour from the king." And so, reciprocally, will an honourless king promote the worship of a fearless God.

Warburton, Serm. xiv.

HOOD.† n. s. [Sax. hab; German heut; Dutch heid.] Quality; character; condition; as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhood. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

Thou ken'st little good,
So vainly to advance thy beedless hood.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

HOOD† n. s. [Sax. hōd, Sax. hōd, probably from hōp, head. Dr. Johnson.—Chaucer writes it hōwer, and Mr. Tyrwhitt derives it from the Teut. hōf, the head. Mr. H. Tooke views it as the participle of the Sax. heapan, to leave or lift up. Ruddiman, as the Dutch hooft, huyf, a coil, huygen, to cover the head. And thus also Serenius refers to the Alem. huten, huden, to cover, to protect.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

The gloves, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils.
Isaiah, lii. 25.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd;
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

All hoods make not monks.

Shakespeare, K. Henry VIII.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Walton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree. It is so named from the hood or cowl of the monks; the cut or fashion of which was so contrived, that in cold or wet weather it might be a covering to the head; or, at other times, might be thrown back, hanging upon the neck by the lower end, after the same manner as the academical hood is now worn.

Such ministers, as are graduates, shall wear upon their surplices such hoods as are agreeable to their degrees; which no minister shall wear, being no graduate, under pain of suspension.

Constit. and Canons Eccl. 38.

To Hood.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress in a hood. Hulot.

To converse veiled and hooded, and sing like a devout nun.

Drivet, Soul and Sens. of Endor, (1674,) p. 816.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To disguise, as in a hood.

But hooded with the show of outward love,
Regulating my simplicitie of mind,
He in the end a deadly foe did prove. Mist. for Mag. p. 648.

3. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shakespeare.

4. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In fountains water dips above;
Of it a dead extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

5. To put the covering on the head of a hawk. A term of falconry, applied to a hawk when he is not to fly. See the third sense of Hood.

See him laugh'd at! See him baffled!

As a hooded hawk, or owl

With light blinded, when the fowl

With their armies cluck about her,
Some to beat, and some to flout her. Fanshawe, Pastor Fido.

HOODMAN Blind. n. s. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shakespeare.

To Hoodwink. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hoodwinking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will blind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the league of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

Then she who hath been hoodwink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,
And hoodwink'd, for a man embrace a post. B. Jonson.

Satan is fain to hoodwink those that start.

Dec. of Perjury

Prejudice so dexterously hoodwinks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?
Fantastick cruelty of hoodwink'd chance! Rame.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,
The hoodwink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Gortch.

2. To cover; to hide.

To be patient, for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hoodwink this mischance. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infancy, which often she had owed to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hoodwinked with kindness, least of all knew how he struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. s. [Sax. hōf; Dutch, hoef.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoof of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Eccl. xxi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoof. More.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

To Hood.* v. n. [from the noun.] To walk; to move by leisurely steps: applied to cattle.

To hood it's as many weary miles,—
As e'er the bravest antler of the woods. Ethwald, H. Scott's Lady of the Lake, Notes.

HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the cloven, the lion is the strongest. Greav.

HOOK.† n. s. [hoce, hoec, Saxon; hoec, Dutch; hake, iecl, hokni, crooked, and Teut. heack, the same.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot-hooks.

This falling rope, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Aniles.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My headed hook shall pierce
Their slinky jaws. Shakespeare.

Though divio Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoll'd,
With hook and ladles, as need did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boll'd. Spenser, F. Q.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Poese are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick. Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doubtless looks,
Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks. Cleland.

She was horribly bold, meddling, and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,
And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. Hook. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running.

9. Hook or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the two examples from Hudibras and Dryden. The phrase is very ancient in our language, although ascribed to the names of two learned judges, in the time of Charles the First, Hook and Crook; implying, that a difficult cause was to be gotten either by Hook or Crook. See observations on Spenser by Warton, who says that the phrase occurs in Skelton; and that the form was not then invented as a proverb, but applied as a pun. The fact is, that hook is the same as crook; our old dictionaries, under hook, say, "a hook or crook;" Hulot, Barret, &c. The original meaning therefore was, either in one form or the other.

For all your bagges, hookers and crookers, you have such a fall, as you shall never be able to stande upright again.

Ap. Crenmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 341.
That which ber size had scrup't by hookes and crookes.

Spenser, F. G. v. li. 27.
Master of almost two millions yearly, what by hook or crook.

Which be by hook or crook had gather'd,
And for his own loveations father'd. Hudibras.

He would venture him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To Hook. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish: upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she hooked me. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.
There are many branches of the natural law now reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

To Hook.* v. n. To bend; to have a curvature.

Her bill hooks, and beaks downwards.
Sir T. Herbert, Tras. p. 383.

Ho'oked† adj. [from hook.]

1. Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gryps, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decrees,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands; unfold the best.

Dryden.
Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backside of leaves. Greav.

2. Furnished with hooks, or any instrument to cut with. [foliatus, Lat.]

The hooked chariot stood,
Unstain'd with hostile blood. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Ho'okedness. n. s. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

Ho'oker.* n. s. [from hook.]

1. That which catches as with a hook.

2. A vessel built like a piuk, but rigged and masted like a hoy; much used by the Dutch. Chambers.

Ho'ok'n'ed. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome there, Cesar, I came, saw, and overcame.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Ho'ok'y.* adj. [from hook.]

1. Full of hooks. [hamosus, Lat.] Hulot.

2. Pertaining to a hook. [hamatilis, Hulot.]

HOOP.† n. s. [hoep, Dutch; hop, Sax. hapt, Icel. a band, from hypia, to draw in, to contract. Serenius.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If I knew
What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world I would pursue it.
Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
— About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring.

To view so few a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain.

Dryden, Juv.
And learned Athens to our mast stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:
The city brush'd against her hoop.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at distance.

Richardson, Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time,
With a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand.

Addison on Italy.
To Hoop. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pots shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer.

The casks for his majesty's shipping were hooped as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron. Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou
Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

I hoop the firmament, and make
This my embrace the arctick. Cleland.

That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Greav.

To HOOP.† v. n. [from woopan or woopan, Goth. or houper, French, derived from the Gothic. This word is generally written woop, which is more proper, if we deduce it from the Gothic; and hoop, if we derive it from the French. Chaucer adopts the French form.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

They shrieked and they hooped.
Chaucer, Nun's Pr. Tale.

To Hoop. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles,
Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be
Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOP.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shout. See Wooop.

1. A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

Every tinker, tallow, hooper, brazier, cardmaker, and house-carpenter, might as they did compare in learning, and all other offices, above a doctor of divinity.

Martin, Mar. of Priests, (1554.) Ll. li. li.

2. A wild swan: by the name of hooper this bird is known among sportsmen and ornithologists; but I have not met with the etymology.

HOOPING-COUGH. n. s. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

HO'OROO.* n. s. [Lat. upupa; Gr. zeu.]

Linnaeus says the name is from the note of the bird, which resembles it. Others deduce it from the Fr. huppé, crested.]

A bird, called also the hoop, of the class of picar; not a lapwing, as some have asserted.

"Vannellus" (the lapwing) is a new-made name of the French "vannus;" which bird, by a great mistake, hath been generally taken to be the upupa of the ancients, which is now by all acknowledged to be the hoopoo.

HOOSE, or HOOZE.* n. s. [Icel. hoaze.]

A difficulty of breathing. Craven Dialect. Thus hoazed is hoarse, in the west of England. Grose. See also HAUST.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wenders

At our quaint sports. Shakespeare.

3. To shout in mirth, in good spirits.

With hoating and shouting we pierce through the sky,
And Echo turns huntress, and doubles the cry.

Dryden.
To HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,
Who did hunt him out o' th' boys. Shakespeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god
That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird, from muting on my head.

St. James.
Patridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment.

HOOT. n. s. [huot, French, from the verb.]

Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glencville, Scorpas.

Colgrave.

To HOP.† v. n. [hoppa, Sax.; hopen, Dutch; hoppe, Su. Goth. probably from the M. Goth. hup, the hip.]

1. To dance. This is the primary sense, like that of the Sax. hoppa. It is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

At every brideale would he singe and hoppe.

Chaucer, Cook, Tale.

What good doth all that dancing of young women holding upon men's armes, that they may hop the lighter?

Northbrooke, Treat. against Dauncing, p. 132.

2. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,

And yet no farther than a wanton's bird,

That lets it go a litle from her hand,

And with a silk thread plucks it back again.

Shakespeare.

Go, hop not over every kennel home; For you shall hop without my custom, sir.

Shakespeare.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman, Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes.

Shakespeare.

The painted birds, companions of the spring, Hopping from spray to spray were heard.

Dryd. Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;

But hopp'd about, and short excursions made

From bough to bough, as if they were afraid.

Dryden.

Her feeble pulse. Where if any day

Of living blood yet in her veins did sleep.

Shenker, F. Q.

HOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dance. So a hop is still denominated in many parts of England. Ainsworth calls it a place, where meaner people dance. But it is, assuredly, the dance also itself.

2. A jump; a light leap.

3. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump.

Addison.

HOP. n. s. [hop, Dutch; hupulus, Lat.]

A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them: the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed.

Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have, For hop poles and crotches in hopping to save.

HOPE. n. s. [hops, Sax.; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a probable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him.

Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again.

Job, xiv. 7.

When in heaven she shall his cause see, This is her ser-vile good, and perfect bliss;

Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be; Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.

Daniel.

Sweet hope! kind chest! fair fallacy! by thee We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou Our absent presence, and our future now.

Craheer.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair.

Rp. Taylor.

He sought them both, but wish'd his hop might find

Ever separate: he wish'd, but not with hope Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,

Beyond his hopes, Ever separate he spied.

Milton, P. L.

The Trojan dames To Pallas' fane in long procession go,

In hopes to reconcile their heavenly foe.

Dryden, Virg.

L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obsolescence.

Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment.

Mortimer.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may some hopes of them.

Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him.

Blomsted is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord.

Eccles. xiv. 2.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain, And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;

To wit, an indigested deform'd lump.

Shakespeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight, Most in his thought, and ever in his sight.

Dryd.

HOP.† n. s. [If we can have any confidence in Buller, hope was used in this sense, in the language of the ancient Gauls, "petite vallée entre des montagnes."

Dr. Jamieson.] Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.

Ainsworth.

Hope signifies a dingle, or little valley; and is retained in Kent, and other parts of England, in the names of places.

Gloss. to Urry's Character.

To HOP.† v. n. [Sax. hopian.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Heb. i.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay, Cold-biting winter marks our hop-for-bay.

Shaks.

So stands the Thracian herdman with his spear Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.

Dryden.

Ho'PEFUL. adj. [from hope, and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee;

I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see?

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are three-score.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly coarcted, whatsoever they took in hand.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial of more nice and difficult experiments.

Whatever ill the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain.

Ho'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls' sons and heirs.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours
we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature.

Ho'PEFULLNESS. n. s. [from hopeful.]

Promise of good; likelihood of success.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability.

Ho'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead?

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

[He]—watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, is sounder:
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need.

The fallen archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks hid advantage, Druiden, State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to die
In duration, doom'd a ling'ring death to die.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless woe of never to return,
Breathes I against thee upon pain of life.

Ho'PELESSLY. adv. [from hopeless.]

Is your last hope past to mollify Morocraft's heart about your mortgage?—Hopelessly past.

Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

Ho'PER. n. s. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents.

Ho'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope;
the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin.

Ho'PPER.† n. s. [hopper, Sax. a dancer.]
One who dances, or hops, or jumps on one leg.

I conceive, a female hopper, or dancer, was called a hopper.

Ho'PPER. n. s. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason,
tremie or tremu.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphalites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill:
their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clock how justly it will sound.

2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth.
Sometimes pronounced, and written, hoppet. Grose.

Ho'PPERS. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.]

Ho'PPET.* See the second sense of HOPPER.

Ho'PPING.* n. s. [from hop.] A dance;
a meeting of persons intending to dance.

Their dances were spiritual, religious, and godly, not after our hoppings, and leavings, and interminglings, men with women.

In the north of England, meetings are still kept up under the name of hoppings.

To Ho'PPLE.* v. a. To tie the feet or

What you perhaps forgot befell you
By way of horary inspection.

Which some account our worst erection. Endymion.
Is his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God by Amor, foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the proximity of their devolution, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer.

His [a Tartar duke's] hard consisted of about a thousand households of a kindred.

Such were the hords among the Goths, the clans
in Scotland, and septs in Ireland.

They once relin'd the flame
Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form.

HoRDE.† n. s. [A Tartarian term, implying multitude.] A clan; a migratory crew of people.

His [a Tartar duke's] hard consisted of about a thousand households of a kindred.

Such were the hords among the Goths, the clans
in Scotland, and septs in Ireland.

They once relin'd the flame
Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form.

HoRIZ. or HOORE.* n. s. [Sax. lup; old Fr. hore; Cornish, hore.] Our old and proper word for hore. See WIONE.

HoRIZON.† n. s. [Gr. horizon, Gr. that which terminates, from hori, a boundary. Shakspeare has once placed the accent on the first syllable of this word: but it should be always on the second.]

The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall rise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must upose the horizon of Ireland.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all the horizon round
Invested with bright rays.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all the horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight.

When the sea was worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but fuming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect.

Horizont.† adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon. Pronounced new and unusual, in 1656, by Heylin.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizon misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the mow,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of powers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle.

HoRIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]

In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally into it.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with that prodigious celerity.

HORN, n. s. [hauru, Gothic; hopn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

Cambridge.

HORO'METRY. n. s. [horometrie, Fr.; ὥρα and μέτρον, Gr.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

HO'ROSCOPE. n. s. [horoscope, Fr. ὁρίζω, Gr.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely it is, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and counteract that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth?
Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope upon the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, approach living creatures.
Brown.

Him born beneath a boiling horoscope,
His size, the blue-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school.

The Greek names this the horoscope.
This governs life, and the marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities, and arts.
Grech.

They understood the planets and the rodlike by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprang out of.
Beatty.

HO'RRENT.* adj. [horrens, Lat. "Horrentia pilis agmina."] Pointed outwards; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
Of fiery seraphim encircled round
With bright labizatory and horrent arms.
Milton, P. L.

The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
Some helpless bark; while sacred pity melts
The general eye, or terror's icy hand

Pope, Olyn.

HO'RRIDLY.* adv. [from horrid.] Terrifically; shockingly.

Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

These inferences, how horribly sweeter they sound,
yet I see not how they can be disclaimed.
Leamy Oracles, &c. p. 57.

HO'RRIDNESS.* n. s. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance.
Hawswind.

The looks of beauty she knew how to wear,
And make her horridness appear so sweet,
That she the wisest and most piercing eyes
Had often blinded by her fallacies.
Bowdler's Fables (1651.) p. 281.

There needs no comment to set forth the horridness of these assertions.
Dy. Bell, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

The horror of death and everlasting damnation.
Alps. Crommer, Def. of the Sac. (1550.) p. 7.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always show, beating his iron wings;
And when his owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy thoughts.
Spenser, F. Q.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd in thought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find.
Davies.

At such bold words, touch'd with a deed to bold.
Milton, P. L.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confest.
Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have sup't full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughter'd thoughts,
Cannot once start me.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Gloom ; dreariness.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood.

The nodding barrow of whose slaty brows
Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger.

Milton, Comus.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades every flower, and darkens every green ;
It weeps the morn of the falling blood,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit ; a sense of shuddering or shrinking.

Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire ; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

HORSE.† n. s. [Sax. hopp ; Suth. hors,
horsa, ors ; Icel. horr or rost, from ros, a course ; reiten, Germ. ; rida, Suth. to ride. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught, and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A horse ! a horse ! my kingdom for a horse !

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses.

Locke.

2. A constellation.

Their face, bright Centaur, autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting in the man ;
Whilst winter's shivering Gost afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy couch.

Grech.

3. To take HORSE ; to set out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine.

Aldison on Italy.

1. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination ; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear

The galloping of horse : who was't came by ?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing.

Bacon, War with Spain.

If they had known that all King's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

7. As fine as a HORSE. A phrase applied to a person tardily or gaudily dressed. It being the custom in this month (May) for the passengers to give the waggoner at every inn a ribbon to adorn his team, she soon discovered the origin of the proverb, as fine as a horse ; for, before they got to the end of their journey, the poor beasts were almost blinded by the twidley, party-coloured flowing banners of their bands.

Gent. Mag. (1754), vol. xiv. p. 354.

8. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse ; as, a horse-face, a face of which the features are large and indelicate. Dr. Johnson. — The prepositive horse is applied variously to denote several things large and coarse by contra-distinction. Thus, in the vegetable system, we have the horse-radish, horse-walnut, and horse-chesnut. In the animal world there is the horse-emmet. (or formica leo), the horse-muscle, and the horse-crab ; not forgetting that a fat, clumsy, vulgar woman is jocularly termed a horse-god-mother. Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language, p. 24.

1. To HORSE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To mount upon a horse ; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his elbows, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wish none of my friends ever to thrive.

Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonsalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horse and armed : Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this ? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm.

HORSECHESNUT. n. s. [horse and chesnut.

Esculus.] A tree.

It hath digitated or fingered leaves : the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips : there are male and female upon the same spike : the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks' time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm ; and all the latter part of the summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots.

Miller.

The horrechesnut grows into a goodly standard.

Mortimer.

Ho'RSECOURSER.† n. s. [horse and courser. Junius derives it from horse and coer, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change, and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoer. The word now used in Scotland is horsecourer, to denote a jockey, seller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them. Dr. Johnson. — Under the word scourer, however, he notices the Italian scorsa, exchange ; whence, he adds, a horse-scourer.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.

A servant to a horsecourser was thrown off his horse.

He has now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreadful justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it. Shakespeare.

Fierce Juno's hate,
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate. Dryden.

HOSTILELY. * adv. [from hostile.] In an adverse manner.

HOSTILITY. n. s. [hostilité, French, from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason nor hostility
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself. Shaks.
Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland. Hayward.

What peace can we return,
But, to our power, hostility and hate,
Unstaid reluctance and revenge? Milton, P. L.

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity. Atterbury.

To HOSTILIZE. * v. a. [from hostile.] To make an enemy; to render adverse.

When England, Spain, Holland, and Russia, united with the powers already hostilized against an impious nation that had reduced robbery, murder, and promiscuous in a cool and practical system, I thought there was the fairest prospect of their success. Seward, Lett. (dat. 1794), iii. 576.

HOSTING. * n. s. [from host.] An assembling of armed men; a muster. Obsolete.

When the lord deputy hath raised any general
hostings, the noblemen have claimed the leading of them. Spenser on Ireland.

Fay off asple a young man, the which fled
From an huge gaunt. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 3.

HOSTLER. † n. s. [from hostler, from hostel.] Originally, the keeper of an inn; host-teller, French. Chaucer so uses it.

One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way. Spenser on Ireland.

HOSTLERY. * n. s. Another word for hostelry; it is the Cornish term for an inn or an alehouse.

HOSTRY. † n. s. [from the Fr. hoste; a very old word in our language. "Inne or ostre." Pr. Parv. Yet Dr. Johnson pronounces it a corruption of hostelry, in the sense only of a place for horses, and with a solitary example from Dryden.]

1. A lodging-house.

In exchange-time one may hear seven or eight sorts of tongues spoken upon their burres, [in the Netherlands;] nor are the men only expert herein, but the women and maids also in their common hostries. Hawell, Lett. (dat. 1622), l. ii. 12.

The tabernacles of our bodies, which are the hostries of our souls, and temples of the Holy Ghost. Bp. Taylor, Drift. Homil. p. 71.

2. A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd;
And Andalusian rivers are on its back sustain'd;
An hostry now for waggons, which before
Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore.

Dryden, Georg.

HOT. † adj. [Sax. hæc, hær, i. e. heated; the past participle of the verb hætan, calcefacte. Mr. H. Tooke. See also the participial adjective HEAT.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?

— Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

— No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produce, do refrigerate; and therefore, in these parts, none is in any body so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Beacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fat;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mist. Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy communion of so very small corpules. Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregretted in vulgar fame, you have Lusturiously pick'd out. Shakespeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa. Shakespeare.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults, that had been known. Beacon.

He resolved to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery.

Clerendon.

To court the hot air, as we, when we found
The assault so dry, as if 'twere only there. Denham.

Our army

Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryd.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go. Shakespeare.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense. Denham.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; / Enceas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people. Dryden.

5. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets. Locke.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jointure,
Which makes him have so hot a mind 't her. Hudibras.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense raised like the desire, or action excited; as, a hot pursuit.

Now law, checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and fall career. Dryden.

7. Piquant; acrid; as, hot as mustard.

HOT. * n. s. A sort of basket to carry turf or slate in, and formerly used for taking manure into fields of steep ascent.

Or needy bankrupts. Dryden, Spem. Fier.

HOTCHPOT.† n. s. [haché en poche, HOTCHPOTCH.] French; or hachée en pot, Fr. as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used. Dr. Johnson.

Mr. Tyrwhitt, and others, consider it as the Teut. hotupot, which Kilian derives from hutsen, to shake.]

1. A mingled hush; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotspot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rude to a Babelish confusion than any other language. Camden, Rem.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hotspot of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Nat. Hist.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;

But a mass'd heap, a hotspot of the slain. Dryden, Juv.

2. Hotspot, old French, "rapport entre cohéridiers, 1000." Lacombe.] A commixture, or putting together, of lands of several tenures, for the equal division of them. Littleton in Covel.

A daughter which hath had given unto her any lands in frank-marriage, claiming to be coheir after her father's death to other lands with some sisters, is constrained to suffer that part of land given her before her father's death, to be put in hotspot, that is, to be mingled together with the lands wherof her father died seized, so that an equal division may be made of the whole. Bullock, (edit. 1656.)

HOTCOCKLES. n. s. [hottes coquilles, Fr.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chynidra is certainly not our hotcockles, for that was by pitching, not by striking. Arbutnot and Pope.

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoms gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye. Gay.

HOTEL.† n. s. [French.] What was formerly hote; a lodging-house; particularly a public house furnished with beds, &c. for the accommodation of occasional lodgers, who are there supplied with apartments hired for the night, or by the week. Of this kind of lodging-house, Mr. Malone says, there was not one till about the year 1760. In 1810 he considered the number of them to be above 100. The designation of coffee-house and hotel, is now very common.

HOTHEADED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and public liberty; nor a hoted, crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbutnot.

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.
Now she professes a hthouse, which is a very ill house too. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

2. A brothel.
Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hthouse; so it may,
And still be a whorehouse: they are synonyms. H. Jonan.

3. A place enclosed, and covered, and kept hot, for rearing tender plants, and ripening fruits. Mason.

HOTLY.† adv. [from hot.]

1. With heat; not coldly.
The shadow had forsook them,
And Time, tined in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them. Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

2. Violently; vehemently.
The stag was in the end so hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney.

As hotly and as boldly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The enemy now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the Christians. Auselus, Hist.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute. Boyle.

1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shakespeare, K. John.

Ah, my poor parents! ah, my tender babies!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And bear your mother's lamentation.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison.

Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unfolded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies.

Prior.

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light
Hover, and catch'd the shooting stars by night.

Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him;
for that he daily loathes after change and alteration,
and hovereth in expectation of new words. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HO'VEN, n. s. [from the verb.] A protection; a shelter by hanging over.

The good also breedeth crabs, eels, and shrimps;
and in the beginning, ostriches grew upon the boughs of trees, (an Indian mistake), which were cast in thither to serve as a hovel for the fish. Cervus, Surv. of Cornwall.

HOVEN Ground. * Light ground; so called in some countries. *Ray, and Graese.*HOUGH, n. s. [Sax. hox, hoh; usually written hox; though hough is still our northern word.]

Obsolete. See HOLT.

Or as the wind, in leafy and shady groaves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Farfax.

HOUND, n. s. [hund, Sax.; hund, Scotch; hunda, Goth. "Vox antiquissima, ac propterea multis linguis et dialect. communis." Serenius.] A dog used in the chase, Dr. Johnson says. At first it was the general name for dogs.

Nile ye give booby thing to houndis, neither caste ye your margaritis before swyne, lest para-venter they defoule hem with her feet, and the houndis ben turned, and al to tere you. Wicliffe, St. Matt. vi. 6.

Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels,
curs,
Are cleped all by the name of dogs.

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and slew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to dryden.

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Liket that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and crevets home. Prior.

To HOUND, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.

God is said to hound the heart permissively, but not operatively nor affectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bp. Bramhall.

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they should have worried them. J. Strange.

misled by Ainsworth. See HOOPPOO.

HOURL, n. s. [heure, Fr.; hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day;

the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour full complement.
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal may live. Shakespeare.

2. A particular time.

Veneration almost stops my breath,
That under'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakespeare.

When we can intrust an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The conscious wreck must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden, Zen.

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare.

Our neighbour let her floor to a gentle stool, who kept good hours. Tupper.

They are so loud any hour of the morning,
as our own countryman at midnight. Addison.

4. In the plural, the stated times of devotion in the Romish church. [heures, Fr.; horæ canonice; Lat.]

None end is there of their labling prayers, their — songs, hours, bells, ymagos, &c. Bale on the Sacrament (1550), P. i.

The hermit, which his life here led
In straight observance of religious vow
Was want his hours and holy things to bed.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 35.

HO'URGGLASS, n. s. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better
by the hourglass than by the day's cleanness. Sibbey.

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind deth values every moment. Bacon.

Shake not thy hourglass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden, Spem. Fran.

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.

HO'URHAND, n. s. [hour and hand.]

That which performs the office of a hand in pointing out the hour of the day.

We have no perception of the motion of the index or hourhand of a clock; and yet this no perception, so many times repeated, becomes real perception, with respect to the minute hand.

Batter on the Soul, ii. 303.

HO'URI, n. s. A Mahometan nymph of paradise.

["They are called horhin, and in the singular number hora; and they are secluded, and well watched and guarded in their palaces, and their garments are wonderful: Thus he [Mahomet] boasts, and says further, that their beauty is as the light." Confut. of the Alcoran, 1652, p. 158.]

Suspend thy passage to the seats of bliss,
Nor wish for hours in Ircan's arms. Johnson, Trag. of Ircan.

HO'URLY, adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alcyone

Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.

We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.

HO'URLY, adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deserves a lord,
That twenty such like boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakespeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, that hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They will ceaseless live;
Surround me, as their saw't; hourly conceive'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton, P. L.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd.

Dryden.

HO'URPLATE. n. s. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness.

Locke.

HO'USAGE. n. s. [from house.] A fee which a carrier, or other person, pays for laying up goods in a house.

Chambers.

Knutius, Hist. of the Turks.

HOV,† n. s. [heu, Fr. a Dutch hoy. Cotgrave. Junius derives hoy from the French word; but it is, according to Skinner, probably from the Dutch hooft, or Teut. hoch, hoy, q. d. a ship made high, considering her burthen. Mr. Pegge thinks that the vessel may have received its original name from stopping (i. e. from the naval term hoy, or ho, in the sense of stop.) at different small places in its voyage, to take in goods or passengers, when called to or hailed from the shore.—A learned writer on naval subjects calls this kind of vessel a huy: "The huyes, and lighters, hired for carrying of ballast." Madyman's Maritime Politics, 1691, p. 85.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;
From whence eunuchs arrived here three hours
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.
Spenser, F. Q.

To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and ship, is hard.
Watts, Logick.

HOV, * interj. [old Fr. hu, huy, a term of the chase; Lat. heu.] An exclamation sometimes used, like the old French term, to encourage dogs; sometimes, in the sense of driving away, i. e. be gone; and sometimes, like holla, for stop, halt. See TO HO.

Away, nasty C. E. transformed by Circe! Hoy! back to her styes!

Hpl. Hist. of the Married Clergy, p. 164.

When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship? hoy! that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Engl. Lang. p. 16.

HUBBLESHIEV, or HUBBLESHO, * n. s. A riotous assembly, according to Grose; a state of confusion, in the Craven dialect, where it is deriv'd from the Teut. hobelen, inglomerate, and schow, spectacularium.

HUBBUB,† n. s. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or hobnob. Dr. Johnson.—It may seem akin to the Teut. hobben tobben, to be in a bustle or hurry, to make a stir. But I rather consider it as a corruption of whoop and up; especially as the early use of the word is in the sense of a cry, a shout; though Dr. Johnson notices only that of a tumult, a riot; and yet his examples from Butler and Milton shew the word in the former meaning. Hubbub was also formerly written whoobub, and seems clearly to have implied, "the whoop is up," the hue and cry is making. See WHOOBUB, and WHOOP.]

1. A shout; a shriek; a loud or shrill noise.

They heard a noise of many bagpipes shrill,
And shrieking hubbubs then approaching near,
Which all the forest did with horror fill.
Spenser, F. Q. lib. x. 43.

Within this hour the whoobub
Will be all o'er the prison: I am then Kissing the man they look for.
Beaumont, and Fl. Two Nob. Knavens.

An universal hubbub with
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence.
Milton, P. L.

Wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when she stiales in water.
Hudibras.

2. A tumult; a riot.

They drove fast with him down the Strand, followed by a multitude of people:—all this was done of design for the lady's escape, which in that hubbub she made. Phineas's Palace, (1656), p. 239.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people.
Clarendon.

HUBBUB-BOO, * n. s. A word formed from the preceding, and denoting the cry or howling of the lower sort of Irish at funerals.

His followers and kin,
Who far and near came crowding in,
With hubbub-boe.
Irish Hudibras, (1685).

Not the sweet harp that's claim'd by Jews,
Nor that which to the far more ancient Welsh belongs,
Nor that which the wild Irish use,
Frightening c'en their own wolves with loud hubbub-boe.
Sam. Wesley, Pindaric on a Hog.

TO HUCK, * v. n. [harceler, Fr. "to haggle, huck, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity." Cotgrave.

From hucker, or hoecker, Teut. A huckster.] To haggle in purchasing goods.

A neat, and hard, and hucking chapman shall never buy good flesh.

Hales, Sermon at the end of his Rem. (1675), p. 30.

HUCKABACK,† n. s. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised. Dr. Johnson.—Rather, a kind of coarse table-linen, having the wett alternately crossed, to produce an uneven surface. Perhaps from the Teut. huyke, a cloak, a covering; feel, huckl, a hood.

HUCKLE,† n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. hucken, to sit down. Serenius notices the Icel. huckell, "tibia ablatis cruribus." The hip.

Though beaten down and wounded sore,
I' the saddle, and a leg that bore
One side of him, not that of home,
But much its better, th' wooden one;
Straight—getting up on stump and huckle,
He with the fore began to buckle.
Hudibras, i. ii.

HUCKLEBACKED, adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HUCKLEBONE,† n. s. [huckle and bone. See HUCKLE.] The lip-bone.

Now, that were the worst, we would not greatly care,
For bursting of her huckle-bone, or breaking of her chair,
But greater, greater is her grief.
Gamm. Gurien's Necrol. (1594).

HUCKSTER,† } n. s. [Teut. hucker, HUCKSTERER:] hoecker, a pedlar, an huckster. V. Kilian.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

A merchant shall hardly keep himself from doing wroog, and an huckster shall not be freed from sin.
Reclus, xvi. 59.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than being hucksters to such vile merchandise.
Gem. of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.
South, Sermon, ii. 595.

Shouldst thou shoo wretch aside, down, down you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.
Goy.

There should be a confederacy of all servants, to drive those China hucksters from the doors.
Swift.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass money is made current.
Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man.
Spenser, Habb. Tale.

Some such desperate hucksters should derive
To rowse their chine hare's heart from her cowardice.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

TO HUCKSTER, * v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to sale.

Some who made calling from shops and warehouses, without other merit, to sit in supreme counsils, (as their breeding was,) fell to huckster the commonwealth.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. iii.

TO HUCKSTER,† v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.
Swift.

Despotism itself is obliged to truck and huckster. The sultan gets such obedience as he can. He governs with a loose rein, that he may govern at all.
Burke, Speech on Conclit. with America.

HUCKTERAGE,† n. s. [from huckster.] Dealing; business.

The ignoble huckster of piddling trades.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng.

HUCKSTER.* n. s. [from huckster.] A she-pedlar. Sherwood.

HUD.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of hood, that which covers.]

1. The husk of a nut or walnut. To hude, to take off the husk. Gloucestershire.

Grise.

2. The side of the fire within the chimney; the back of the fire. A northern word. Grise, and Brockett. Written also hood.

TO Huddle.* v. a. [probably from hood, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the German huddle, to huddle up.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry. At twelve she rose with much ado;

Her clothes were huddled on by two. Friar.

Now all in haste they huddle on Their clothes, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To cover up in haste. Young, fair, and good! ah, why should young, and fair,

And good be huddled in untimely grave? Edwards, Son. 57.

4. To perform in a hurry. I have given much application to this poem:

this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain The lab'ring husband in his house retrain,

Let him forecast his work with timely care, Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden, Virg.

5. To throw together in confusion. Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

But here, though say't the miseries of life Are huddled in a group. Young, Night Th. 8.

TO Huddle.* v. n.

1. To come in a crowd or hurry. Glance an eye of pity on his losses,

That have of late so huddled on his back, Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaks.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Incon.

Thyrs, whose artful strains have oft delay'd the huddling brook to bear his maddragal,

And sweeten'd a every muskrose of the dale. Milton, Comus.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, huddling forward, fall from high places. Brown, Felo. Err.

2. To cuddle. A northern word. Westmoreland and Cleveland Dialects, &c. See TO Cuddle.

Huddle.* n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanville.

Thy carrying business in a huddle, Hudibras.

How forc'd our rulers to new-model. Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle. Locke.

Several merry sayings were made to my question, which entertained us till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Addison.

Huddle.* n. s. [Germ. huddle.] One who throws things into confusion; a bungler.

A confused huddler of things. Cutgrave, and Sherwood.

HUE.* n. s. [Sax. hipe, hipe, and also hue; our old authors usually write our word hew. Serenius notices the Sueti. hy, the colour of the face, which in the Icelandic is the down of it, from hwa, hyn, to cover.]

1. Colour; die. For never in that land

Face of fair lady the before did view, Or that dread Lyon's look her cast in deadly hue. Spenner, F. Q.

To add another hue unto the rainbow, Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shaks. K. John.

Flowers of all hue, and without thorn. Milton, P. L.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd Celestial ruby red, lov'd's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton, P. L.

Your's is much of the camelion hue, To change the die with a distant view. Dryden.

2. [Huée, French; from huer, to shout after. Kelham deduces this from the old Fr. huckel, a huntsman's horn.]

A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakespeare.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high; And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addis.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

HUED.* adj. [from hue.] Coloured. Written accord. See HUE.

Phelus was old, and hued like lichen. Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

Lastly stood war in glittering army ycal, With visage grim, stern looks, and blackly hued. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

HUER.* n. s. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a bulker of huers, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carver, Surv. of Cornwall.

HUFF.* [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment.

To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance. Quoth Ralph, honour's but a word

To swear by, only in a lord; In others it but a huff. Hudibras.

To vapour with instead of proof. His frowns kept multitudes in awe,

Before the bluster of whose huff All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

A Spoilard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensure or circumvent another in a position, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel Huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden, Spens. Friar.

Lewd shallow-brained huks make Adriam and contempt of religion the soft badge and character of wit. South.

TO HUFF.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff. In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the wind-pipe. Cruik.

2. To Hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr. Hough, You must not presume to huff us. Richard.

3. To offend. 'She's easily huffed.' Brockett's N. Country Words.

TO HUFF.* v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

Therefore the unaid and Roman matrons all, A shadowing veil before their face did wear;

Their lowly bow did throw no man to shew; They were content with plain and decent gear, They huff it not with painted fringed hair. Mur. for Mag. p. 218.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing crew, A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Oweny.

A thief and justice, fool and knave, A huffing officer and slave.

Huffing to forwards, waving to the brave, To knees a foot, to cred'ulous fools a knee. Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say! What, a fifth set to crown his huffing play? Dryden.

What a small particle of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

HUFFER.* n. s. [from huff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I heard my art To be expos'd! 't'nd to suffer, By such a braggadocho huffer. Hudibras.

HUFFINESS.* n. s. [from huff.] Arrogance; petulance.

Their understandings being but cretural huffiness of mind, and an ambition of approving themselves the brokers and maintainers of strange paradoxes. Annot. on Glanville, §. (1682.) p. 248.

HUFFISH.* adj. [from huff.] Arrogant; insolent; lecturing.

HUFFISHLY.* adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HUFFINESS.* n. s. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

TO HUG.* v. a. [heyan, Saxon, to hedge, to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace. He bewept my fortune,

And hug'd me in his arms. Shakespeare.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade! L'Estrange.

E'en in that urn their brother they confess, And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

1. Under false pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glowing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unpalatable,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snarers. Milton, Comus.
We hug deformities, if they bear our names. Glanville.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling look. Racine.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the importer, and with both arms hug the abuse. South.

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery. Rosce.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Asterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

5. To applaud or congratulate one's self, on account of supposed advantage or superiority.

These shall be declared the rightful heirs of the kingdom, when the presumed sons of it, who hugged themselves as the only favourites of heaven, and warmed their hands by their own fantastic fires, who flew aloft, on the wings of imagination, and proudly looked down upon the modest and humble believer:—these, we have reason to think, shall then be cast out. Glanville, Sermon, p. 315.
Not to mention the wonderful delight of libel-ling men in power, and hugging yourself in a corner with mighty satisfaction for what you have done with mighty safety. Swift, Essay, No. 36.

HUGG, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Close embrace.
Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him. Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

Knock down, was the word in the civil wars,
and we generally added to this skill the knowledge of the Cornish hug, as well as the grapple, to play with hand and foot. Trotter, No. 175.

HUGGE<sup>d</sup> adj. [hough, high, Dutch. Dr.
Johnson.—It is from the old Fr. hugue,
"enormous, grand." Roquefort.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalles in greatness, not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America. Abbott.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge. Milton, P. L.
Part, huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwildly, enormous in his gait,
Tempest the ocean; there Leviathan,
Huged of living creatures, in the deep
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And sees a moving land. Milton, P. L.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness. The patch is kind enough, but a huge freckle. Shakespeare.

Through forest huge, and long untravell'd depths,
With desolation brown, he wanders waste. Thomson.

4. Having any quality in a great or high degree.

The mercy, and the pardon, and the huge moderation of that court. Hammond, Works, iv. 505.
He received adoration always as huge kindness. Felt, Life of Hammond.

HUGELY, adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can threaten tax any private party?
Dost it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakespeare.

2. Greatly; very much.

Some think it is enough, in all instances, if they pray hugely and fervently. By, Taylor, Sermon, (1655), p. 131.

Their cause is hugely suspicious, though they then repent and call for mercy. By, Taylor, Holy Dying, § 4. ch. 5.

A thing so hugely pleasurable. Hammond, Works, iv. 479.

It was hugely accidental, that Josiah king of Israel, being commanded by the prophet to strike upon the ground, (2 Kings, xxi.) should strike no other than just three times. Scott, Sermon, i. 298.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HUGENESS, n. s. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

For though, in hugeness, that blacke fleet of Spain
Did far surpass; yet was it farre more slow
In nimble strage waiting to and fro. Mir, for Mag, p. 820.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare.

HUGGEUS, <sup>d</sup> adj. [from huge.] A low word for vast or enormous.

HUGGERMUGGER, n. s. [corrupted perhaps from hug or morcher, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, hoker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is perchic, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine. Dr.
Johnson.—This expression was also written hucker mucker, with the same meaning of in secret. "They should not have lurked all this while in hucker mucker." Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, 1565. fol. 88. "The matter hushed up in hucker mucker." Watson, Quodlibets of Rel. and State, 1602, p. 44. This directs us to the German mucken, to mutter, to speak low, as the probable etymon of part of the word. "They—in hugger mugger mutred what they durst." Mir, for Mag, p. 457. Dr. Jamieson, under the similar Scottish expression hudge mudge, notices also the Icel. miugg, secretly, as the basis of it.
which lhre, he adds, inclines to deduce from the German mucken. Of the expression of the former part of the expression, viz. hugger, hudge, or hucker, to the Teut. huggen, and the Saxon hugan, to mind, to observe, which Skinner and
Dr. Jamieson state, there may be doubt.
To hugger appears to have been a cant term for to lurk about, in the sixteenth century; as Steevens remarks in a note on huggermugger, in Shakespeare.] Secrecy; by-place.

The patrimony which a few
Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Spenser, Hush. Tale.

We have done but greenly,
In huggermugger to lute him. Shaks. Hamlet.
But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er 'er 'in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work. Hudibras.
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and what's done in hugger- mugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.
L'Estrange.

HUGUENOT, n. s. [There have been many fanciful derivations of this word proposed. The most rational is that of Eignots, confederates, which Voltaire and others have given, from the German eidgenossen; of which it seems to be a corrupt pronunciation. The term of Huguenot had its rise in 1560; that of Eignot, at the beginning of that century. "Nouveau sujet de division dans Genève. Ce fut alors (1513) qu'on y vit naître les titres d'Eignots, et de Mammulx, par lesquels les deux parties se distinguèrent. Les Eignots étoient ceux qui tenoient pour la liberté de la patrie. — On les appelloient ainsi, parce qu'ils amoient la liberté, comme les Cantons Suisses, qui s'appellent en leur langue eidgenossen, c'est à dire, confédé-rez. De là est venu vraisemblable-ment le nom des Huguenots," Ruchat,
Reform. de la Suisse, vol. i. p. 447.]
One of the reformed religion in France;
a French Calvinist.

Mersey tells us, that the name of Huguenots, or Fidlers, (so printed by Dryden, but evidently mistaken for Eidgenots or Eidgenossen, from whence it was corrupted, signifies league, or association, in the Swiss language; and was brought, together with the sect, from Geneva into France.
Dryden, Preface to the Hist. of the League.

HUGUENOTISM, n. s. [from huguenot.] Fr.
huguenoterie.] The profession or principles of an Huguenot.

Sherwood, and Bailey.

HUGGY, adj. Vast; great; huge. Not in use. Dr. Johnson says, citing only Carew. He had forgotten Dryden and others.

This huge rock one finger's force apparently will move. Cress, Sure, of Cornwall.

The wide waste plains, and the huge plain.
Sarkville, Induct. Mir, for Mag.

Scarce had he finish'd, when with speckled pride,
A serpent from the tomb began to glide:
His huge bulk on seven high volumes roll'd, Blue was his breadth of back, but streak'd with scaly gold. Dryden, Æn. v.

HUISHER, n. s. [French, huissier.] An attendant; a door-keeper. Now written usher. See USHER.

It makes huissiers serviceable men.
B. Jonson, Forest.

HUKE, n. s. [Dr. Johnson merely cites the Fr. hugue; but that is from the Teut.
huycke. Our old lexicography calls it
"a Dutch attire, covering the head, face, and all the body." Bullokar, and Cocke-ran. Cotgrave describes it as a "Dutch mantle, or a Dutch woman's mantle."
The low Latin huca, as well as the Fr.
hugue, whether a mantle, hood, or robe, appears to have been worn by both sexes. See Du Cange and Laconbe.
Kiliau says that the Teut. huycke is the same as hoeck, from hooden, to cover. Our word has been written also hyke.] A cloak; a mantle.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich robe.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

HULCH. * n. s. [from the Su. Goth. halk. Serenus and Ithre. From halka, to excavate; hol, hollow. Others, from the Gr. ὕλη. "Ships of burden, which the Roman authors call "naves onerarie," and the Grecian φορτίον and δομάτις, whence the name of our hulks may properly be derived, served for the conveyance of victuals, &c." Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. iv. 20. Dr. Johnson, under hull, admits that hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky. Yet here, in its proper place, no notice is taken of it. The Saxon hulce is described as a light, swift ship; the Teut. hulter, as a large and heavy one, "navis oneraria, navigium latum vastumque." Kilian.]

HULCHBA* KED. * adj. [hulch and back.] Crook-backed; having bent or crump shoulders. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HULCHED.* adj. [from hulch.] Swollen; puffed up. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HULCHY.* adj. [from hulch.] Much swelling; gibbous. Sherwood.

HUL'ET.* See HOWLET.

HULK.† n. s. [Su. Goth. halk. Serenus and Ithre. From halka, to excavate; hol, hollow. Others, from the Gr. ὕλη. "Ships of burden, which the Roman authors call "naves onerarie," and the Grecian φορτίον and δομάτις, whence the name of our hulks may properly be derived, served for the conveyance of victuals, &c." Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. iv. 20. Dr. Johnson, under hull, admits that hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky. Yet here, in its proper place, no notice is taken of it. The Saxon hulce is described as a light, swift ship; the Teut. hulter, as a large and heavy one, "navis oneraria, navigium latum vastumque." Kilian.]

1. A ship: a vessel of burden; "a broad ship." Huloet.

The many anchors wa'd,
One English ship, two hulks of Holland, aid
In such a pinch. Mir. for Mag. p. 414.

2. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakespeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea in the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbuthnot.

They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her picky sides for wax. Swift.

The sooty hulk
Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

3. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland, and the north of England; as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

The hulk of a tall Brabantier, below whom I stood in the corner of a street, shadowed me from notice. Hip. Hall, Spec. of his Life, p. 22.

TO HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hulk. Ainsworth.

HUL'LY.* adj. [from hulk.] This is a colloquial term in many parts of England, for a heavy, large, or unwieldy person.

HULL.† n. s. [hulgen, Gothic, to cover. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. hullen, the same. See TO HELL, and TO HILL. "Hull of a nut, &c. That by which the nut is covered. Hull of a ship. That part which is covered in the water." Mr. H. Tooke,

vol. II.

Div. of Purl. ii. 383. In the former assertion, Mr. Tooke is supported by preceding etymologists; to the latter difference of opinion may be safely objected, in following Ithre's derivation of hulk, i. e. hulk, from the verb signifying to hollow out; a term, he says, originally applied to the trunks of trees hollowed out, the first vessel of the Scythians.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing: the outer covering; as, the hull of a nut covers the shell.

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls out drudgily bulks light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature. Greer.

3. To lie a Hull. Spoken of a ship, either in a dead calm or a storm, when she cannot carry all her sails; or her masts are taken down or gone, and she is left at the direction of the waves.

We took in our sail, and lay a hull, most sufficiently. Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 298.

Like a ship at hull and becalmed.
Hammond, Works, iv. 655.

TO HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcass of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcass, hulling there, partly broken, partly burned, and partly drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir, here lies your way.
— No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shakespeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood. Milton, P. L.

People walking down upon the shore saw some what hulling toward them. L' Etranger.

TO HULL.* v. a.

1. To peel off the hull or husk of any seed. The man will hull the seeds for his morsel with his bill, and present them to her in this state. Latham, Synops. i. 310.

2. To fire cannon balls into the hull of a ship, within the point-plank rank. Chambers.

HUL'LY. adj. [from hulk.] Silhusky; husky. Ainsworth.

HUL'VER. n. s. Holly. Save hulk and thorn, therefore flail for to make. Tusser.

TO HUM.† v. n. [hummelen, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees. An airy nation few, Thick as the humming bees that bunt the golden dew. Dryden.

In summer's heat,
To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound. I think he'll bear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhears me. Shakespeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, You'll live. Shaks.

3. To make a confused noise, like that of bustling crowds at a distance. The city warrens intense: the publick hums,
Full of each theme and warm with mix'd discourse,
Hums indistinct. Thomson, Winter.

4. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd it upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras.

I will acquiesc'd,
And never hum'd and have'd sedition,
Nor smuffed treason. Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L' Etranger.

5. To make a low dull noise; to murmur. Humming rivers, by his cabin creeping.
Rock soft his slumbering thoughts in quiet ease. P. Fletcher, Finc. Eccl. ii. 17.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

6. To express applause. Approbation was commonly expressed in publick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago. Here the spectators hummed. Ed. Ch. Burn.

Gradually, this humming is not at all becoming the gravity of court. Trial of the Regicides, (1660.) fol. 49. b.

TO HUM.* v. a.

1. To applaud. See the last sense of the verb neuter. The better sort among them will confess it a rare matter to bear a true edifying sermon in either of their great churches; and that such as are most hummed and applauded there, would be scarcely suffered the second hearing in a grave congregation of pious Christians. Milton, Apology for Smectymnus.

2. To sing low; to utter murmuring or indistinctly. Hum half a tune. Pope.

The wild wind hums the sullen song to night.
Rev. G. Dutt, Ode, (1780.)

3. To cause to hum or make a dull noise: as, to hum a gig or top.

4. To impose upon a person. See the eighth sense of the substantive Hum. Hum.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects. To hum Hezekiah's summons.

The sharp-bored beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning psalm. Shakspeare, Macb.

Nor unlightful is the creetles hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance. From camp to camp, through the foal womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Tower'd cities please us thus, then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton, L' All.

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis light,
And full of hum and buzz from noon till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise. Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome, Sleep fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound. These shrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said sch's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say sch's honest. Shakspeare, Hist. Hen. V.

Your excuses wait some grains to make them current: Hum and ha will not do the business. Dryden, Span. Friar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum, Dr. Johnson says; where, however, the word is not hum, but bum. 3 c

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spec.
7. Formerly a strong liquor drunk by the common people; whence, perhaps, the application of humming to ale. See Humming Ale.

Shew
The taking of tobacco, with which the devil is so delighted: — and calls for hum.
You takers of strong waters and tobacco, Mark this. B. Jonson, Dev. in an Act.
8. A jest; a low trick; a hoax. [It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson notices, with Serenius, the Su. Goth. hum, an uncertain rumour, a slight suspicion; the origin of which is unknown.]

A landlord of Bath put upon me a queer hum.
Imp. Oxford Satirist.

HUM, interj. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
See air Robert — hum! Pope.

And never laugh for all my life to come.

HUM'AN, adj. [humanus, Lat. human Fr.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton, P. L.

Three, serpent, subtil't beat of all the field,
I knew; but with human voice indu'd. Milton, P. L.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMANATE,* part. adj. [from human.]

Invested with humanity.

Of your saying it followeth, that the bread is humanate or incarnate.

Alp. Cramer, Answer to Dr. Gardiner, p. 369.

HUMAN'E, adj. [humane, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and mankind men become human and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness, and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more human, are planted in their stead. Spinoza.

HUMAN'LY, adv. [from human.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMAN'NESS,* n. s. [from humane.] Tenderness; humanity. Scott.

HUMANIST,* n. s. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologist; a grammarian; a term used in the schools of Scotland, Dr. Johnson says, without any example, and without noticing that it is well used by our own writers for one skilled in the knowledge of human nature.

Physicians use commonly to intend some other art or practice, which they fancy more than their profession; for you shall find in their antiquaries, poets, humanists, statesmen, merchants, divines; and in every of these better seen than in their professions. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

Of all sorts of men in the world, none repute themselves, or are reputed by others, wiser, than the profound humanist and cunning politician.

Junius, Sin. Sigmat. p. 603.

HUMAN'ITY,* n. s. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Lat.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sedley.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakspeare.

To preserve the Hebrew justice and mercy, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do so to oblige mankind by his informations. Glasville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out, And court the offices of soft humanity?

Like thee receive their ransom for the naked, Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan, Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Brown.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ. The French so use les humanités.

If then we may spend some of young years in studies of humanity; what better and more sweet study is there for a young man than Poetics? Harrington, Apology of Poetry.

A man but young,

Yet old in judgement; theoretic and practick In all humanity. Mansinger, Faust Dreyer.

The most eminent scholars which England produced both in philosophy and humanity. Warton.

To HUMANIZE, v. a. [humaniser, Fr.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe, — And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow, To humanize the frowns wherewith I tread. Warton.

Was it the business of magic to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HUMAN'KIND, n. s. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfined; A knowledge both of books and human-kind. Pope.

HUMAN'LY, adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Aster.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though tears'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere; Pope.

Modestly bold, and humanely severe.

HUMAN'ATION,* n. s. [Lat. humanatio, from humus, the ground.] Interment.

Chambers.

HUM'BIRD, n. s. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our plantations have shew'd us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a bee. Brown.

HUM'BLE, adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield, Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humble after it is done,

Then when it was humble doing. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, till the point of death. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life.

Dr. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble, who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

The example of the heavenly ark,
Thy fellow-post, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud music sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Talbot.

Ah! prince, hast thou but known the joys which dwell

With humble fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Brown.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.

To HUM'BLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Herakliah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 3 Chron.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate? Milton, S. A.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Rogers.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empires,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addison, Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Frederick.

Fortune not much of humbly me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost. Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Isaiah, on Providence.

HUM'BLEBEE,* n. s. [humble and bee.]

What may be the true etymology of this word, I am in doubt. The humblebee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns an humble cow;

so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie, and Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Teut. humolen, bombum edere. some think that the humblebe ought rather to be called humblebee, from the Lat. bombus, on account of the deepness of its note. It is so called in many parts of England. See HUMBLEBEE. Chaucer, however, uses humbling in the sense of humming, murmuring, or muttering, which at once decides the etymon: "Like to the humbling after the clappe of a thundring." House of Fame, ii. 31.] A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybees steal from the humblebees, And for night tapers gnaw their waxen thighs.

This puts us in mind once again of the hum-bees and the underbees.

HUMBLEBEE. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. s. A fly that eats the humblebee. Ainsworth.

Write him down a slave, who, humblily proud, With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death, Thy goodness I'll adore; And praise thee for thy mercies past, And humblily hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HUMBUG. n. s. An imposition; a very low word. Not used in any serious writings. See the eighth sense of HUM.

There is a word very much in vogue with the people of taste and fashion, which though it has not even the "penumbra" of a meaning, yet makes up the sum total of the wit, sense, and judgement of the aforsaid people of taste and fashion! — "This peace will prove a confounded humbug upon the nation. — These theatrical managers humbug the town damnably!" — Humbug is neither an English word, nor a derivative from any other language. It is indeed a background sound, made use of by most people of distinction! It is a fine make-weight in conversation, and some great men deceive themselves so egregiously as to think they mean something by it! Student, vol. 2. (1751), p. 41.

HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone. Dr. Johnson. — From hum, and the Ital. drum, dull, melancholy; or drum, to proceed slowly.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humiliations, used to be companions of repentance. By. Brannhall.

HUMID. adj. [from humid, Fr. humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow, Winds the voracious banks that blow Flowers of more mingled hue, Than her purple scarf can show. Milton, Comus.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes, And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

Newton, Optics.

HUMIDITY. n. s. [from humidus, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and on wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this green watry pumpkin. Shakespeare.

O blessed breeding uow, draw from the earth Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and refining.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

TO HUMILE. v. a. [old Fr. humilier.] To humiliate or humble. Obsolete.

Davyd ought to humile himself. Sp. Fisher, Pt. p. 4.

HUMILIATION. n. s. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of mankind; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Try humiliation with exaltation, With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton, P. L.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown, Vulg. Err.

With tears Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the halits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. s. [from humilis, Fr.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make provision of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gouture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any yet at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The weight of a king tempteth to revenge,
The humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive.
King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use
Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wild journey's end. Drumman's Sophy.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fault after dinner. South.
As high turrets, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and beading avoided
the present storm. Darwin.

HUM'BLER, n. s. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.
HUM'MING, n. s. [from To hum.]
1. The noise of bees or flies.
The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.

So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night robbers lift the well-stored hive,
An humming through the waten city grows. Dryden.

Hoarse hummings of unnumber'd flies
Dr. Norton, Ode to Evening.

2. An inarticulate sound.
Upon thy honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.

3. A dull, unmeaning noise.
The musical accents of the Indians, to us are but inarticulate hummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glanville.

*HUM'MING AL** Sprightly ale; probably from the spirituous liquor called hum, which also perches displaced; or from a mixture of hum with the malt liquor, as spirits are now sometimes mixed with
it. See the seventh sense of HUM.

With humming ale encouraging his text.
Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Rum, brandy, gin with choicest snack,
From Holland brought, Bateria's rack;
All these will mought avail,
To cheer a truly British heart,
And lively spirits to impart,
Like humming nappy ale.
Song inserted (perhaps inaccurately) to Gay.

HUMMING BIRD.* See HUMBIRD.

HUMMOCK,* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of hummock.] A little hill; rising ground.

Point Pownsee being N. N. E. about three miles distance, and some remarkable hummocks on the north. Hutchinson's Voyages.

HUMMUS,* n. s. pl. [Persian, hummus, a hot-house. See Tr. Herbert, Trav. p.
318.] Sweating-places, or baths. The word is used by us only in the plural.

Artificial grotto, having also hummuses of stone paved with white marble. Tr. Herbert, Trav. p. 169.

The hummuses (or sweating-places) are many.
[at Cathyn in Persia.] Tr. Herbert, Trav. p. 311.

HUMORAL,† adj. [Fr. humoral, Cotgrave.]
Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Circulation.

HUMORIST,† n. s. [humoristo, Italian;
humoriste, Fr.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

Many of the rest were as had men as princes;
humorists rather than of good humours.

Extraordinary men of arts, in all ages, are generally observed to be the greatest humorists; they are so full of the sweetness of their own conceptions, that they become morose when they are drawn from them. Spratt, Hist. R. S. p. 336.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase hence. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.
Do ye see a nice humorist, that will not dress a dish, nor lay a cloth, nor walk abroad on a Sunday, and yet make no conscience of censuring his neighbour on the workday? Bp. Hall, Sermon. The Hypocrite.

3. One who is fond of jesting; a wag; a droll.
An infectious collection of base vice and fashions of men and women — will be of use only among humorists for jests and table-talk. See Tr. Bodley, Letter to Sir F. Bacon.

These poor gentlemen endeavour to gain themselves the reputation of wits, and humorists, by such monstrous conceits as almost qualify them for Bedlam. Addison, Spect. No. 35.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist.
Spectator.

Shakespeare's heroes, and Johnson's humorists.
Tatler, No. 12.

4. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wise and timous liquibation the peccant humours and humorists may be discovered and purged, or cut off by mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HUMOROUS,† adj. [from humour.]
1. Moist; humid; damp; dewy.
The humorous fogs deprive us of his sight.
Dryden, Baron's Wars, C. 1.

Every lofty top, which late the humorous night
Bespangled had with pearls. Dryden, Polyd. S. 13.

He hath hid himself among those trees,
To be courted with the humorous night.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

2. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marvay was a lawyer who had lost his cause; that Marvay
this passage alludes to the story of the satyr Marvay, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

3. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.
I am known to be a humorous physician; said to something imperfect in favour of the first complaint; hasty and tender-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never get
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shakespeare, R. John.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

O, you awake then: come away,
Time be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay;
What doth make you thus delay? R. Jonson.

Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Bough as a storm, and humorous as the wind.
Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts, Logic.

4. Pleasant; jocular.
Try humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgiven;
And pensive, war'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st it and dost thou know 't not what.
Prior.

HUMOROUSLY, adv. [from humorous.]
1. Merrily; jocosely.
A cabinet of medals. Juvencal calls very hu-morously, concinnum, argutum in tula facillimum.
Addison.

He has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.
We resolve by halves, and undevotedly; we resolve rashly, silyly, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Campden.

1. Fickleness; capricious levity.
2. Jocularly; oddness of conceit.
3. Petulance; peevishness.

It must be extreme humorosus in deny a Providence in them. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

HUMOROSITY,† adj. [from humour.]
1. Peevish; petulant.
I am glad that, though you are incredulous, you are not humorosus too. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

[This] seems to me very humorosus and unreasonable. Blackwell, Sacra, Clau. I. 17.

2. Odd; humorous. In this sense it is less used.
Our science cannot be much improved by unqualities, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorous disguises. Swift.

HUMOROSELY,† adv. [from humorosus.]
Peevishly; petulantly.
There is no time of the world, wherein there are not very plainly the prints divine providence, and evidences of a Providence continually presiding over the world, if a man do not humorously despise them. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

HUMOUR, n. s. [humour, Fr. humor,
Lat.]

1. Moisture.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper
of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton, S. A.

3. General turn or temper of mind.
As there is no such thing as to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness be seen out. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgement, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour; as he was going through Lusen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lusen. He asked, a good while after, what town it is we are now in? They said still it was Lusen; then, said the king, I will be king of Lusen. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd, And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscomben.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.
In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humour usually teaches charms to last, Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant To break into the blood-house of life. Shakespeare.
Another thought her nigher humour for. Faust.

Their humours are not to be won, But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras.
Temp't not his heavy hand; But one substitutive word which you let fall, Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularity; merriment.

In conversation humour is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge. Temple.

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition.

He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fist of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.
The child had a humour which was cured by the waters of Glastonbury. Firding.

7. Pettulancy; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindness to be enjoyed? Swift.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying; he hath wronged me in some humour; I should have borne the humour'd letter to her. Shakespeare.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others' humours: therefore it is good to take both. Bacon.

To HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would carry with master Shallow. Shakespeare.
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me. Shakespeare.
Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts, and volities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick; Why not when I am speechless? Pope.
Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts, Logic.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man, That which smooth air could'st humour best our tongue. Milton, Sonnet.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden, Pref. to Albion.
Fontainebleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison.

HUMOURIST.* See HUMORIST.

HUMOURSOME.* See HUMORSOME.

HUMP. n. s. [corrupted perhaps from HUMP. See BUMP. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably from the Lat. humbo, which is the boss of a buckler, and also a tump or hillock.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the hump fell. Taylor.

Accidents, as a wound, bruise, dislocation, or fracture, may introduce humps, distortions, &c. Chryse, English Malady, ch. 3. § 5.

2. A hump; a bunch. [Germ. hucker.]

HUN'CHBACKED.† adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flattened, and hunchbacked. L'Ettranger.

But I more fear Creon! To take out hunchback'd monster in my arms, Th' execration of a man. Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

The second daughter was peevish, baggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

HUN'DRED.† adj. [hunderd, Dutch; hund, hunpbe. Sax. from the Goth. hund. At first the Gothic expression for hund was taihun, tailhund, or tailhunderthand, i. e. ten times ten. This was abbreviated into the last syllable. See Lye, edit. Manning, in V. Goth. hund.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke, A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryden, Æn.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUN'DRED. n. s.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propensities innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbuthnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [hundredum, low Lat. hundred, old Fr.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loathes in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised; here complaints were exhibited. Hagyard.

HUN'GER.† n. s. [hunger, Sax. the past participle of hynjan, to hunger, according to Mr. H. Tooke. It is, however, the Su. Goth. hungar, whence also the Dutch honger. See also To HUNGER.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation; but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach. Quincy.

Thou shalt see three enemies in hunger and in thirst. Drod. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower exerts upon the coats of the stomach, vitiates the fibres, and thereby produces the scene we call hunger. Grave.

Something viscous, fat, and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The innominate felicity we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetite and hunger for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

For hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

To HUNGER.† v. n. [M. Gothick, hugrian, pronounced hugrian; Sax hugrian.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be to a mace
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

As he returned into the city, he hungered. St. Matt. xxi. 18.

Widely they gaped, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Do'st thou no hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee! Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

Stay but a little. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

I content thee,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts than feed
Me hungering more to do my father's will. Milton, P. R.

To HUNGER.† v. a. To famish; as, to hunger a person, that is, not to allow sufficient food. Common in the north of England; and used, perhaps, in other places.

he afterwards an hungered. St. Matt. iv. 2.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungered love to smell hot bread. Recon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thou much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd'st suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungerily they fed;
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden, Jun.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare.

By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Francis.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feed it;
whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cannus has a lean and hungry look. Shakespeare.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

dings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old Dyden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks, worth money. Adams.

HUNS.† n. s. pl. [Lat. Hunni; Sax. Duns.]

A barbarous people of Scythia, who, after subduing Pannonia in the third century, gave to it the present name of Hungary, and settled there.

Theophilactus Simocatta, speaking of the Alans,
a Scythian nation dwelling near Ister, saith, that they were descended from the Huns. Purchas, Pilgrim, (1617.), p. 409.

His countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their huns. Hudibras, l. ii.

To HUNT. v. a. [huntian, Saxoan, from hunb, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Jak. xxviii. 59.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Ps. cxl.

The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that faint would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found to hooks is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support
the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hare. Addison.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Esau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen. xxvii. 5.

On the old pagan toms, marks, hunting machines, and Bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A huntsman. [Sax. hunca, a hunter.]

This is the ancient usage of the substantive, which remained in our lexicography in Charles the First's time.
"A hunt, or huntsman." Sherwood's Dictionary. Dr. Johnson has not noticed it. Ready for to ride

With hunde and borne, and hounden him beside. Chaucer, K. T. 101.

2. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd

By sovereign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grin'd at us they pass'd. Dryden, Hind & Panther.

3. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

4. Pursuit.

I've lost myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HUNTER.† n. s. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pasture or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of fens, chases, and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Darwin on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind.

Milton, P. L.
Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glancing his father's eyes with guileless gore.

Dryden, Æn.
This was the arms or device of our old Itoman hunter; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Melaeger for their patron.

Addison on Italy.
Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.
2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the val'd fit
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. A hunting-horse, as it was formerly called. The name of hunter, applied to the horse, is modern: as, he rides a good hunter.

HUNTING.* n. s. [Sax. huncung, venatio.]
The diversion of the chase.

When we grow up to men, we have another succession of sanguinary sports: in particular, hunting. I dare not attack a diversion, which has such authority and custom to support it.

Guardian, No. 61.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

HUNTINGHORN. n. s. [hunting and horn.]
A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whist a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorns and pole. Prior.

HUNTINGHORSE.* n. s. [hunting and horse.]
A horse to hunt on, what is now called,
a hunter.

His hunting-horses were the finest and best managed in all these parts. Spectator, No. 116.

HUNTINGSKAT.* n. s. [hunting and scat.]
A temporary residence for the purpose of hunting.

Near it [is] a house built by one of the grand dukes for a hunting-seat, but now converted into an inn. Grey, Lett.

HUNTRESS. n. s. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou, thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth away. Shakspeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chase. Milton, Comus.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
The immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Brown.

HUNTERMAN. n. s. [hunter and man.]
1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a hunterman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser, Sonn.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What hunterman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a manner chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the hunterman, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Esrange.

HUNTERMANSHIP.* n. s. [from hunterman.]
The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, huntermanship, or play. Donor.

To betoken his huntermanship, he holdeth in his hand the skin of a wild beast. Gregory, Pastoral, (1650,) p. 228.

HURDEN.* n. s. [from being made of hurdles, or coarse flax.] A coarse kind of linen. It is used adjectively, as linen, woollen, and words of that kind very frequently are. Mason.

It is, when he is reaping, making hay, or when he is bedding in his hurdens flock. Shakespeare.

HURDLE.* n. s. [hybel, Sax. The past participle of hyþban, to keep, according to Mr. H. Tooker. Serenius, long before, had thus deduced the Icel.
hurd, crates, from the verb hyrda, to keep. Hence the Germ. hurde, a hurdle; and the old Fr. houerde, which has also hordel, "hordelles, des claires pour les charpes, crates." Lacombe.]

1. A texture of sticks woven together: a crate.

The sled the tumbler, hurdles and the sail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden, George.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakspeare.

The blacksmith was kanged, down, and quartered at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after times. Bacon.

To HURDLE.* v. a. [from the noun. German, hurdlen.] To make up, hedge, cover, or close with hurdles. Sherwood.
This old verb has lately been revived.

In hurdled cotes the flocks are pen'd. Scott, Sonnets, &c. p. 173.

HURDLES.* n. s. [See HURDLE.] The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

HURDY-GURDY.* n. s. [I know not whence it is derived.] A stringed instrument, often heard in the streets of London;
though, as Mr. Ritson has observed, not in the hands of the natives; the strings of which are agitated by the friction of a wheel. It is played by foreign mendicants, most frequently women.

Whom have we here? a sightly swain and sturdy! Hunt; plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy.

Foot's Midas.

To HURL.* v. a. [from hurth, to throw,
Icelandic; or, according to Skinner, from whirl. Dr. Johnson.—
To whirl, and to hurl, are both derived from the Su. Goth. hurra, to turn round rapidly; Sax. hleppepan; and I should imagine hurl to be the elder of the two.
Wicliffe uses it in the sense of beating vehemently, whirling round with violence.
"The wyndis bleweth, and thei
hurlden agen that hous, and thei felde down." St. Matt. vii. 27. "The flood was hurled to that house." St. Luke, vi.
Hence our hurwind. See also To HURTL.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heavens have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it till thy sin be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Shakspeare.

I with my nails dig'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Shakspeare, Rom. II.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. 1 Chron. xii. 2.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. B. Jensen.

Hurl'd heading to partake with us, shall rue
Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton, P. L.

She strikes the lute; but if it sound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge, hurl at Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden, Jus.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl at them heading to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler,
French, to make an howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship for come from wat'ry wilderness, Spenser.

He hurls out vows,
Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of heaven. Milton, P. L.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts;
to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away: every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

To HURL.* v. n. To move rapidly; to whirl.

The very streams look languid from afar,
Or through the unshelter'd glade impatient seem
To hurl into the covert of the grove. Thomson, Summer.

HURL.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of casting or throwing.

The gods with horror and amazement look'd down,
Beholding rocks from their firm basis torn,
Mountain on mountain thrown,
With threatening light that shook it's ethereal firmament. Congreve, Ode on taking Namur.

2. Tumult; riot; commotion. [hurler, Fr.]

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knoles.

After this hurl the King was fain to flee Northward in post, for succour and relief. Mir, for Mag. p. 358.

HURLBAT. n. s. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat.

HURLER.* n. s. [from hurl.]

1. One who throws, or hurls.

The store that strikes the wall
Sometimes bounds back on th' hurler's head.

Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 48.

- This curving shingle, a hurler of stones as well as a railer. Milton, Apost. for Simeonians.
2. One that plays at hurling.
The hurler must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

HUR'RLIND.† n. s. [hurrl and wind].
A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word
not now in use.

Like scatter'd down thy howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurrlwinds from his mansion thrown.

Steady, Job.

No sudden hurrlwinds shall your bodies cut
On trembling earth. Sandy's Christ's Feast, p. 15.

HUR'RLY.† n. s. [from the French
HUR'LBURLY.] hurrlubrela, inconsiderately.
Dr. Johnson, — "Hurly-burly means, literally much ado, it was a far more frequent expression of the English, than of the Scottish writers, during the age of Elizabeth and James. Hurly signifies gross, great, bullock. Barly-brand, a great sword, or a great fury. Coles,
Hurler, Fr. to do as others; to be wicked with the wicked. Diet. Comique.
And see hurler, in Menage. Johnson is content to derive this expressive term, from the modern Fr. hurle-burle, not hurrlubrela; for it is not to be found in the old French word-books." Chalmers, Gloss. to Sir David Lyndsay's Works. — Mr. Chalmers and Dr. Johnson have overlooked a distinction of burly, in our language, for boisterous and loud; which I have illustrated in its place. Hurly-burly, therefore, may fairly be deduced from the Fr. hurler, to howl, to make a great cry, and the Teut.
borlen, to make a noise; forming "a name which intimates the sound of that it signifieth; as hurlyburly, for an uprose and tumultuous stirre." Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, 1577. Sign. C. iii.]
Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffles and blow by the top.

That with the hurly death itself allones. Shakspeare.
Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakspeare.
All places were filled with tumult and hurly-burly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Kewley, Hist.

When, I pray you, these classical assemblies, and those sedulous stirs and hurlyburlys of Marinists?

Sir G. Pind, Life of Asp. Whitgift, p. 63.
HUR'LBURLY.* adj. Tumultuous.

Poor discontent,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakspeare.
In the hurlyburly days of queen Elizabeth.

HURRA'it.* interj. [probably from the Goth. hurra, to agitate, to move violently or rapidly.] A shout of joy, or triumph, or applause, or encouragement; at first, perhaps, the shout of soldiers at the onset.

HUR'RUCANE.† n. s. [huracan, Spanish; HURRICANO.] ouragan, French; originally from the Su. Goth. hurra, to move rapidly or violently. Our word was at first variously written herocane, and hericcano, as well as hurricane, and hurricane. A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We believed a herocane was begun, a vast or unwonted tumour in the air.

Sir T. Herbert, Trac, p. 41.
The winds are not only wild to a storm, but even stark mad in an hurricane.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 122.
A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes.

Burnet, Theory.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end.

The ministers of state who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;

There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricane descends,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison.

HUR'RIER. n. s. [from hurry]. One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

TO HUR'RY.† v. a. [heppan, to plunder,
Saxon; hura was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb. Dr. Johnson. —
It is the Goth. horra, hurra, or hyra, to agitate, to drive, to move violently.]
To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;

And will amassment hurry up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

Shakspeare.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march and hurried meeting here?

Milton, P. L.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it.

South.

That hurried o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighbouring shore.

Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off
the stage.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Race, Royal Court.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination.

Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.

TO HUR'RY. v. n. To move on with precipation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.

Dryden.

HUR'RY. n. s. [from the verb.] Tumult;
precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England,
Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Wadsworth.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it influences the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mist hurry barricades the street.

Gay, Trivia.

HURRY-SCURRY.* adv. [an expression noticed by Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Etym.
Dict. for a tumult, an uproar; "from the Su. Goth. hurra, cum impetu circumagi, & skorra, sonum stridulum edere, or skura, increpare, objurare."

We may look upon it, like hurly-burly, formed to signify its own meaning.]
Confusedly; in a bustle; with noise and tumult.

Each hole and cupboard which they explore,
Each crack and cranny of his chamber,
Run hurry-scurry round the floor,
And o'er the bed and tester clamber.

Gray, Long Story.

HURST.* n. s. [Sax. hyrst, silva; low
Lat. hurta, Du Cange. Horscht, hurst, vigilantius, silva humilis tantum frutices proferens, frutetum. Kilian. Mr. H.
Tooke derives it from the Sax hyrpan, to adorn; and says, that hurst is applied only to places ornamented by trees. It is true that hurst, or hyrst, is used by our old writers for a wood; and many places in this country, that have this word for part of the name, were so called from being near woods; and in the margin of Drayton's Polyolbion, from which the example of the word is cited, hurst is explained a wood. In the north of England, it denotes a bank or sudden rising of the ground. The term, as Dr. Jamieson has observed on the Scottish usage of the word, may have been originally used to denote the barrenness of ground, as shown by its producing only twice and brushwood, from the Icel. hyrst, hyrst, in the pl. rendered laca virgulta obusta, or veridina. Teut.
horst. From this sense of it, an underwood might easily become the next,
and then generally a wood; a rising ground, planted with trees.] A small wood; a knoll covered with trees.

To her neighbouring chase the courteous forest
show'd

So just-conceiv'd joy, that from each rising hurst, Where many a goodlie oak had carefully been nurs'd,

The Sylvan in their songs their fruitful meeting tell. Drayton, Polyolb. B. 2.

TO HURT.* v. a. preter. I hurt; part.
pass. I have hurt. [hyrc, wounded, Sax.
hurtar, to strike, Fr. Dr. Johnson. —
The past participle of hýrran, injuria afflicere, vexare. Mr. H. Tooke. — But I must add the Teut. horten, which means the same as our hurt.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcomes shall not be hurt of the second death. Rev. ii. 11.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthral'd.

Milton, Comus.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life.

Watson.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakespeare, Othello.

It breeds contempt

For words to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion grows within his den.

Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.
See thou hurt not the oil and wine.

Rev. vi. 6.

HURT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Harm; mischief.

The hurt thereby is greater than the good.

Spenser.

I have slain a man to my hurt. Gen. iv. 23.
I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker on Learning.

2. Wound or bruise.

Where is he wounded?

— There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts in 't body.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst, and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and sciences, 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Prior.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the king. Eras. iv. 22.

HURTLE.† n. s. [from hurt.]

1. One that does harm.

2. A wounder. Cotgrave, and Skerwood.

3. The shoulder of the axle against which the nave of the wheel knocks. [Fr. hurtier, to knock.] Brockett, North Country Words.

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.]

- Mischivertous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful haze in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun.

Dryden, Georg.

HURTFULLY.† adv. [from hurtful.]

- Mischivertously; perniciously. Skerwood.

HURTFULNESS.† n. s. [from hurtful.]

- Mischivertousness; perniciousness. Skerwood.

TO HURTLE.† v. n. [hurtier, French; urtare, Italian. Dr. Johnson—

Skinner considers hurtle as derived from hurt; or perhaps from the old Fr. hurteler for healer, to push, or hit violently against. In the sense of encountering with violence, the word has been probably adopted from the Italian urtare, as it is a common phrase in that language for rushing on the enemy, "urtare contro i nemici." See Upton's note on Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.]

1. To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jostle; to meet in shock and encounter. Hamner. "To stumble against a thing." Pr. Parv.

They drew out their swords, and hurried together with violence.

Hist. of Prince Arthur, P. i. ch. 28.

Kindness

Made him give battle to the lionses,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurtling,
From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. To clash; to rattle.

The noise of battle hurried in the air.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Iron sheet of arrow shower

Hurtles in the darken'd air. Gray, Ode vii.

3. To rush forward.

Sudden uprisings from her stately place

The royal dame, and for her cothe doth call;

All hurried forth. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.

4. To wheel round; to turn about quickly.

His approved skill to ward.

Or strike, or hurtle round in warlike gyre.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 8.

TO HURTLE.† v. a. [To move with violence or impetuosity. This is probably the original of hurl. Dr. Johnson.—See the etymology of the verb neuter, and the fourth sense of it. But the original meaning of hurtle seems to be to push, to thrust, in an active sense.]

1. To push with violence.

They hurried in the sculp, [they thrust in the sculp, Transl. of 1578: they run the ship aground, Pro Translation.] Widdis, Acts, xxvii. 41.

He foisteth on his foe with a trouchoun,
And he him hurtleth with his horse adoun.

Chaucer, An. Tale.

2. To move with violence, or rather with velocity; to whirl round; to brandish.

His harmful club he gan to hurtle high,
And threaten battle to the fairy knights.

Spenser, F. Q.

To toss the spear, and in a warlike gyre
To hurtle my sharp sword about my head.

Salmas, Emp. of the Turck, (1594.)

HURTBERRY.† n. s. [hiot bar, Danish; heopoberg, Sax.]

Bilberry; bacca vitis idea.

HURTYLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Where bold he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;

For simple goodness shined in his eyes. Sidney.

[She] joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shorter every gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTYLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.]

Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity.

Sidney.

HURTYLESSNESS. n. s. [from hurtless.]

Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND.† n. s. [hastband, master, Danish; from house and bonda, Runick, a master; hufbonda, the master of the house or family, and also a husband; huf-bunda, Sax. Chronicon; "husbonde, Su. Goth. from hus, domus, and bonde, colonus, maritus, titulus olim honorificus."

Serenus. "The Su. Goth. bonde denotes the head of a family, as opposed to a servant; a husband, as opposed to a wife; a citizen or private person, as opposed to a prince; an inhabitant of the country, as opposed to those who live in towns; and also one who possesses his own inheritance, as distinguished from those who cultivate the property of others." Dr. Jamieson. An allusion to the etymology, as Mr. Malone also has observed, occurs in Shakespeare: "You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house." Meas. for Measure.

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shaks. Tem. of the Shrew.
Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn.

Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband. Locke.

2. The male of animals.

Ev'n though a snowy man thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold.

Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband;
owner of a lordship ill husbanded. Drives on Ireland.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what all husbands we are of so tender a fortune.

Culter on Fime.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.

Husband's work is laborious and hard. Spenser, Husb. Tale.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds.

Bacon.

In those fields
The painful adiant plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields.

Holcroft on Providence.

If continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work. Dryden, Georg.

TO HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my sea,
Being so father'd and so husbanded?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

If you shall prove
This ring was ever his, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded him bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. Shakespeare.

In my right,

By me invested, he compels the best.
— That were the worst, if he should husband you.

Shakespeare.

2. To manage with frugality.

It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.

The French, wisely husbanded the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend out all
That thou can't speak at once; or husband it,
And give men turns of speech. Herbert.

S D

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he sits at a great rent. Bacon.

HU'SHANDLE.* adj. [from To husband.] Manageable with frugality. Sherwood.

HU'SHANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;

A woman, naturally born to fears.

HU'SHANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.

These plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart; And compass it then, it is a husbandly part. Tusser.

HU'SHANDMAN.† n. s. [husband and man.]

1. A master of a family. See HUSBAND. Not now in use.

Sicke lay the husband-man, whose that the place is. Chaucer, Somn. Tale.

2. One who works in tillage.

This Dary serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman. Shakespeare.

The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman. Bacon.

HU'SBANDRY. n. s. [from husband.]

1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.

He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his knowledge well dunning of a field. Shelley.

Ask'd if in husbandry he sought his know,
To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow.

Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food. Spenser, Husb. Tale.

Peace hath from France too long been clus'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Her plentiful womb
Expresseth in full till and husbandry. Shakespeare.

The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Baile, Hist.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage and pasture. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestic affairs.

Lucretia, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakspeare.

HUSH.† interj. [Without etymology. Dr.
Johnson.—Cotgrave partly points out the etymology in his translation of the French housche; "an interjection whereby silence is imposed; hush,
WHIST, ist, not a word for your life."
This leads us to hush and whist, from which we have also whisk. See HIST, and TO WHIST. Chaucer uses hush for whist. To hush occurs in the old dictionary of Palgrave, in the sense of still;
and soon afterwards, in the dictionary of Huloet, the word became hush: "To hush, or to keep silence: hush, hold thy peace." So Cotgrave, hush. It finally became hush.] Silence! be still!

no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush!
'tis so. Shakespeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is mar'd! Shakespeare, Tempest.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still;
silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,

A silence in the sea, the rack stand still,

The bold winds speechless, and the orb below

As hush as death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.]

To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;

Another seem'd envious or coy;

Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;

But at these strangers presence every one did hush.
Spenser, F. Q.

TO HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,

As to be hush, and nought at all to say. Shakspeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your suburban wave of the poppe;

But since you are a gentle convertess,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,

And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.
Shakspeare.

Speak softly;

All's hush as midnight yet. Shakespeare, Tempest.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me.
Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,

Will thou then talk thus to me? With thee then hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Owen.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;

He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her size at length is kind,

Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;

Prepares his empire for his daughter's case,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

The court was hush'd, and a whisper ran.
Addison.

TO HUSH UP. v. a. To suppress in silence;
to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hush'd up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HU'SHONEY.† n. s. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dexterous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney needs to all the neighbours round;

His master, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

I expect hushmoney to be regularly sent for every fall; or vice any one commits in this whole town;
and hope I may pretend to deserve it better than a chamber-maid or a valet de chambre. Taiter, No. 26.

HUSK. n. s. [huldsch, Dutch, or huycken, from huy.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold you poor and starved bond,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shades and husks of men. Shakespeare.

Most weeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the scorn cradled. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat

Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribulate large! and on the board Heaps with unsparring hand. Milton, P. L.

Some steep their needs, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husk with fruitful grains. Dryden.

Some, when the press
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; about, more wise, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ Philips.

The pond'rous crop Philips.
Barley for pisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground.

Arabianist on Coins.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

TO HUSH. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HU'SKED.† adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk. Sherwood.

HU'SKINESS.* n. s. [from husk.] Hoarseness; the state of being husky.

HU'SKY.† adj. [from husk.]

1. Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Virg.

Call all such husky and curious arts and studies, the recreations and entertainments of children, and the weak supports of the gaudy trade of cheating and imposture. Spencer on Profr. p. 404.

With timely husk

Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer must. Philips.

2. Hoarse; having a rough or dismal sound; having a cough, formerly heaky, and husty, "tuscious," Ort. Vocab. See HAUST.

Here the mouth of sad Melponence
Is wholly bent to tragedy's discourse:—
Here moves the wretched muse, in seat of tears,
And loud laments, to tell a dismal tale;
A tale wherein she lately hath bestow'd
The husky humour of her bloody quill. Temple, Soliman and Perdisa, (1599.)

Pross was dead, and Sergeant Quirkitt
Grew husky, and had left the circuit.

Austey, Pleader's Guide.

HUSSA.* n. s. [Fr. houssier, hussier, hussard; low Lat. hussaro; Germ.
huasar.] Originally an Hungarian horse-soldier, light-armed. The name appears to have been given also to the driver of a chariot, who perhaps was armed. At the close of the seventeenth century some regiments of French cavalry were called hussars, and soon afterwards the word became common in our language.

Two Hungarian miles from Friestlan lie Banca;
we being here upon the 16th of March: the hussar, who drove our chariot light, after we had supped went out. Brown's Travels, &c. (1085.) p. 56.

They were a sort of some hussars, that were allowed in our cities, like the wild ones in our camp; who had all the privileges belonging to us, but at the same time were not tied to our discipline or laws. Taiter, No. 56.

He made his breeches and his doublet of ore constituted piece of cloth, after the manner of the hussar. Spencer, No. 57c.

HU'SSATE.* n. s. One of the followers of John Huss of Prague, the reformer, and the contemporary of Wicliffe; whom Fox pithily describes as "a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellentie favoured for his worthe life."

Procopius despised the pope's excommunication, and the crusade he had published against the Hussites; and overcame the forces, which the emperor had sent against them.

Poileteers, Etc. Hist. 15. Cent.

HU'SSV.† n. s. [corrupted from housewife: taken in an ill sense.]

1. A sorry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disparagement.

Get you in, hussey go; now will I personate this hopeful young jade.

Southey, Innocent Adultery.

2. A kind of book, used by women for holding thread and other small materials. Sometimes called a huswife.

HU'STINGS.† n. s. [huycing, Sax.; hushing, Goth. and Icel. From hus, flomus, and ting, forum, conventus. Serenius. From huf, domus, and hing, res, causa, q. d. domus causarum. Lye. From huyre and hing, q. d. supremum iudicium. Sommer.]

1. A council; a court held. From the sheriff's court in the city of London, a writ of error lies to the court of hustings before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs. Blackstone.

2. The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

I stood on the hustings (except when I gave my thanks to those who favoured me with their votes) less like a candidate, than an unconcerned spectator of a public meeting. Burke, Speech at Bristol.

TO HU'STLE.† v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hustle. Dr. Johnson.—Not so, but from the Teut. hutsen, hutselen, to shake together.] To shake together in confusion.

TO HU'STLE.† v. n. To shrug up the shoulders. A northern term. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, and Grose.

HU'SWIFE.† n. s.

1. A bad manager; a sorry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good; and huswife or hussy in a bad sense, Dr. Johnson says. Huswife is the early form of writing housewife, and not a corruption of it, as he asserts; for if it be, by the same rule husband would be a corruption of houseband. It is the Sax. huf and wife. Our old writers use huswife, in a good sense, as the mistress of the house. See the second meaning.

Hence

A huswife, that, by selling her desires, Bays herself bread and cloth. Shakspeare, Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

Good huswife provides, ere a sickness do come, Of sundry good things in her house to have some. Tuam.

TO HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality. But huswife the little Huwer had lent, She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;

And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two. To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HU'SWIFELY.† adj. [from huswife.] Thrifty; frugal; becoming a housewife. Good *huswife*ly physick. Tuam.

His [Tuam's] huswife admonitions — are not particularly addressed to the farmer.

Watson, Hist. R. P. iii. 507.

HU'SWIFELY.† adv. Thriftily; like a good huswife or husband.

HU'SWIFERY.† n. s. [from huswife.]

1. Management good or bad.

Good *huswife*ry trieth

To rise with the cock;

Ill *huswife*ry lieth

Till nine of the clock.

The good lady — therein reap'd

The just reward of her high *huswife*ry;

To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,

When she was far. H. Jonson, Forest.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.

If chesses in dairie have Argus his eyes,

Tell Cately the fault in her *huswife*ry lies. Tuam.

HUT.† n. s. [hutte, Saxon; hutte, Germ.;

hute, French.

1. A poor cottage.

Our wandering saints, in woeful state,

To a small cottage came at last,

Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,

Who kindly did these saints invite,

In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

See hier† by wintry wind,

How many shrink into the sordid hut

Of cheerless poverty! Thomson.

2. A temporary building to lodge soldiers.

TO HUT.† v. a. [Fr. huter.] A military expression; as, to hut troops, i. e. to lodge them in huts.

HUTCH.† n. s. [hpyence, Saxon; huche,

French.]

1. Not simply a corn-chest, as given by Dr. Johnson, but also a chest of any kind; a coffer, called in the north country, (as Hulot also says under hutch), an ark. See ARK.

In their tabernacles, ampers, hutches; or as a mystery in their locked closets.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 253.

The hutch and the boulder, the furnace and copper. H. Jonson, Manages.

The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks. Mortimer.

Archbishop Chicheley gave a borrowing chest to the university of Oxford, which was called Chicheley's hutch. Watson, Notes on Milton's Comus.

2. Among farmers, a hollow trap for taking vermin alive; and also a kind of case for keeping rabbits.

3. In Kent, a small cart. Grose.

TO HUTCH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To hoard; to lay up as in a chest.

In her own loins,

She hutch'd the all-warship'd ore, and precious gems. Milton, Comus.

HUTCHINSONIAN.† n. s. One of the followers, in this country, of the philosophical and religious opinions of Mr.

John Hutchinson of Yorkshire, in the last century; whose notion was, that a plenum and the air are the principles of the Scripture philosophy, and whose scheme of reformation related to the original language of the Old Testament and the true sense of the Bible.

This Hutchinson — possibly may not call himself an Hutchinsonian, though I have presumed to introduce him here, from a similarity both in the letter and spirit of his sermon to those of that brotherhood.

Heathcote, A Word to the Hutchinsonians, (1756),

p. 15.

TO HUZZ.† v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur. "Strident apes: the bees huzz." Barret.

HUZZA.† intj. [from the Hungarian huzars, who loudly shout at the onset in battle, according to some; from huzanna, the acclamation of wishing well, according to others.] An exclamation of joy, or triumph.

Liberty, Property, and Old England, for ever, huzz! Goldsmit, Etc. 24.

HUZZA.† n. s. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzes of the rabble are the same to a hearer that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbuthnot.

All huzzes is foreign, but of true desert; Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart; One self-approving hour whole years outweighs

Of stupid stagers and of loud huzzas. Pope.

TO HUZZA.† v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caldron of fat beef, and steep of ale, On the huzzing mob shall stirr and prevail.

King, Cobby.

With that I huzzed, and took a jump across the table. Tuam, No. 43.

TO HUZZA.† v. a. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Adisson.

HYACINTH.† n. s. [ἡάκινθος, Gr.; hyacinthe, Fr.; hyacinthus, Lat.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root. the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed; the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.

The violet there, impur'd for the loom, Biv'd at the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope, Ode.

2. A gem.

The hyacinth is the same with the lapis lycaenius of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour.

Hill on Fossils.

HYACINTHINE.† adj. [ἡάκινθος, Gr.] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

[His] hyacinthine locks Round from his parted forehead mainly hung.

Milton, P. L.

His curling locks like hyacinthine flowers.

Cowper, Odyssey.

HYADES.† n. s. [ἡάδες, Gr.] A watery Hyades, † constellation.

Then Hyades quiver'd heaven, and found a name For every star, and every wandering star; The pleiads, Hyades.

Dryden, Georg.

HYALINE, adj. [ἡλινος, Gr.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heaven-gate not far, founded in view
On clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton, P. L.
HYBRID, \ adj.* [Gr. ἕβρις, ἕβρις; Lat. hybridus.] From ἕβρις, as it signifies a kind of adultery. Mongrel; of different species: applied to plants as well as animals.

We should by all means deal with our separatists, and dissenters, as St. Paul did with those joining, hybrid Christians. Smith, Sermon, v. 518.

HYBRIDOUS, adj. [ἕβρις, Gr.; hybridus, Lat.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridus production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDATIDES, n. s. [from ὕδωρ, Gr.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropsical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts. Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wicman.

HYDRA, n. s. [hydra, Lat.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken tongue to imp her serpent's way. Milton, Sonnet.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden, Æn.

Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUES, n. s. [ὕδωρ and ἄγω, Gr.; hydragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages. Quincy.

HYDRAULICAL, adj. [from hydraulica.] HYDRAULICK, adj. [Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.]

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulical engines. Derham.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels. Arbutnot and Pape.

HYDRAULICKS, n. s. [ὕδωρ water, and αἰλός, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

Hydraulics has for its object the motion of fluids. Adams.

HYDROCELE, n. s. [ὑδροκύη, Gr.; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture.

HYDROCEPHALUS, n. s. [ὕδωρ and κεφαλή, Gr.] A dropsy in the head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extruded into the ventricles of the brain. Arbutnot on Diet.

HYDROGEN, n. s. [ὕδωρ water, and γεννάω, to generate.] One of the principles of water; in chymical language, as it is found in the form of gas, and then called inflammable air.

HYDROGRAPHER, n. s. [ὕδωρ and γραφω, hydrographie, Fr.] One who draws maps of the sea.

It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographers. Bosch.

HYDROGRAPHICAL, adj. [from hydrographie.] Applied to maps or charts, which represent the sea-coast, rocks, islands, shoals, shallows, and the like.

Christopher Columbus, the first great discoverer of America, was a man that earned his living by making and selling hydrographical maps. Chambers.

HYDROGRAPHY, n. s. [ὕδωρ and γραφω; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

To further the noble studie of navigation and hydrographie.

Norman, New Attractive, &c. (1592.) Dedic. For the reception of which waters he had prepared a channel; how deep, or how great a part of the earth is filled with them, I suppose is beyond this man's skill in philosophy or hydrographie to determine.

Br. Copt. Animals, on Burnet's Theory, p. 84.

HYDROLOGY, \ n. s.* [ὕδωρ and λόγος; Fr. hydrologie.] Description of the nature and properties of water in general.

HYDROMANCY, n. s. [ὕδωρ and μανία; hydromantie, Fr.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians; there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Avicenna, Pangen.

HYDROMEL, n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέλι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were pizans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.

HYDROMETER, n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον, Gr.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity, gravity or density, velocity or other properties, of water.

HYDROMETRY, n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον, Gr.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA, n. s. [ὑδροφobia, Gr.; hydrophobia, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia or dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDROPHOBY, \ n. s.* [Fr. hydrophobie.] Dread of water.

A letter from Dr. Lister to Mr. Aston, dated at York, March 26, 1685, was produced, containing an account of an hydrophobia in a man bitten by a mad dog. Dirch, Hist. R. S. l. iv. 197.

HYDROPICAL, adj. [ὑδροπικός, Gr.; hydro-pick, Fr.] Hydro-pick, adj. [from hydro, Lat.]

1. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cambrides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydro-pick water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The world's whole sea is sunk;
The general basin th' hydro-pick earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydro-pick swellings if they be pure, are pellucid. Wicman.

Hydro-pick swatches by degrees decay.
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lie,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fly. Beaumont.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsies, the water of the hydro-pick. Arbutnot.

2. Resembling dropsy.
Some men's hydro-pick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydro-pick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

HYDROPSY, \ n. s.* [hydrops, Lat.; ὕδρωψ, Gr.; hydropsie, Fr.] Personified by Thomson for the dropsy.

Soft-swells and pale, here lay the Hydrops, Unwieldy man, with belly monstrous round. Castle of Indolence.

HYDROSTATICAL, adj. [ὕδωρ and στατικός, Gr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above, because bone, the heaviest in species, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.

HYDROSTATICALLY, adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter; as for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically,—both always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley, Sermon.

HYDROSTATICKS, n. s. [ὕδωρ and στατικός, Gr.; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

Hut (Boyle's) incomparable treatise of the air and hydrostatics. Bentley, Sermon.

The lofty column of water issuing out of the trumpet of Fame, exceeded all our conceptions of the power of hydrostatics.

Suabourne, Trav. through Spain, l. 48.

HYDRO-TICK, n. s. [ὕδωρ, Greek; hydro-purge, Fr.] Purger of water or phlegm. He went to have from the first his hydro-purge into hydroicks and purgers of bile. Arbutnot on Cains.

HYDRUS, \ n. s.* [from ὕδωρ, Gr. water.] 1. A water-snake.

2. In astronomy, the water-serpent; a southern constellation.

HYEMAL, \ adj.* [Lat. hyemalis.] Belonging to winter; as, the hyemal solstice.

Besides vernal, estival, and autumnal made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal gardens. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 92.

Astronomers have divided the whole face of heaven into four colours; the vernal, estival, autumnal, hyemal. Mason, Astronom. Pl. Coroll. p. 10.

To HYEMATE, \ v. n.* [Lat. hyemare.] To winter at a place. Cockeram.

HYEMATION, \ n. s.* [Lat. hyematio.] Shelter from the cold of winter.

Where we set them [exotic plants] in for hyemation. Everhart.

HYEN, \ n. s.* [hyene, Fr.; hyæna, Lat.; HYENNA, Fr. Canis, Gr. Supposed to be from the Fr. hien, a swine; because the back of this animal is bristly like that of the swine.] An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hym, when you are inclined to sleep.

A wonder more amazing would we find;
The hym shows it, of a double kind:
Varying the sexes in alternate years;
In one hegets, and in another bears.

The hym was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts. If thereby we understand the hym, admiranda, or civet cat.

The keen hym, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

HYPOMETER. n. s. [ὑπομέτρον, Gr.] hymmetre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hymmeter than the earth of the river.

HYGROSCOPE. n. s. [ὑγρὸν and σκοπεῖν, Gr.] hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to show the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes.
Arbitrariet.

HYGROSCOPIC. adj. [from hygroscopic.]
Having affinity to water.

Hygroscopic substances have their humidity always proportionable to the places they are in.

HYLARCHICAL. adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχή, Gr.]
Presiding over matter.

By this hylarchical principle, or plastic nature, so many of the vital motions of man may be kept in play. Hallywell, Metaphysics. (1681.) p. 70.

HYLOZOIC. n. s. [Gr. hyla, matter, and ζῷον, life.] One of a sect of ancient atheists that held all matter to be animated and to have perception.

When they (Spinoza and his followers) speak of the intelligence and knowledge of God, they mean to attribute those powers to him in no other sense, than the ancient hylozoists attributed them to all matter; that is, that a stone, when it falls, has a sensation and consciousness; but that the consciousness is no cause at all, or power, of acting. Which kind of intelligence, in any tolerable propriety of speech, is no intelligence at all. And consequently the arguments, that proved the Supreme Cause to be properly an intelligent and active Being, do also unnecessarily prove that he is likewise induced with liberty and choice; which alone is the power of acting.

Clarke on the Attributes, § 9.

HYMN. n. s. A species of dog; unless it is by mistake for hym, Dr. Johnson says; which it is, in the passage from Shakespeare's Learn which he cites. See LYM.

HYMEN. adj. n. s. [ὑμην, Gr.]

1. The god of marriage and nuptials on his head, and on his shoulders a robe like an imperial mantle, white and unsponsored all over, excepting only that, where it was clasped at his breast, there were two golden turtle-doves that buttoned it by their bills, which were wrought in rubies. He was called by the name of Hymen.

Taylor, No. 120.

Hymen marched immediately after Love; and, seconding the good inclinations which he had inspired, joined the hands of both armies.

Addison, Guardian, No. 152.

2. The virginal membrane.

3. In botany, a fine delicate skin in which flowers are enclosed, while in the bud; spoken particularly of roses.

HYMENÆAL. n. s. [ὑμηναιος, Gr.] A HYMENÆAL marriage song.

And heavenly choirs the hymenæal sing.

Milton, P. L.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgin hymenæal sing.

Pope.

HYMENÆAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mindful voice
A signal of her hymenæal choice.

Pope, Ode.

HYMN. n. s. [ᾠδὴ, Gr.; hymne, Fr.] An encomiastic song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I sang, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I like should frame.

Our solemn hymns to sudden dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried care.

Shakespeare.

When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
Overture for the wars.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Bacon.

Farewell, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and sing.

Dryden.

To HYMN. v. a. [ᾠδίζω, Gr.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose earlier business were to serve their Lord
High up in heaven, with songs to hymn his throne.

Milton, P. L.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning praise'd
God and his works.

Milton, P. L.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
This avill of doctors, but sent him hence
To build a peaceful branch of palm above;
And hymn it in the quire.

Dryden, Spon. Friar.

HYMNICAL. adj. [ᾠδικός, Gr.] Relating to hymns.

Where she (faire Ladie) tuning her chaste lutes
Of England's Empreress to her hymnical string.

Mir. for Mag. p. 773.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnical notes
In birds, heaven's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

Donne.

HYMNOLOGY. n. s. [ᾠμολογία, Gr.] hymnology, French.] A collection of hymns.

That hymnology which the primitive church used at the offering of bread and wine for the eucharist.

Mela. Dia. p. 36.

To HYM. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypocondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hymned since I saw you.

Spectator.

HYPALLAG. n. s. [ὑπαλλάγη, Gr.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYPER. [Gr. ὑπερ, above, beyond.] A word often found in composition, in our language, usually signifying excess, or something beyond the meaning of the simple word to which it is joined.

HYPER. n. s. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again.

Prior.

HYPERASPIS. n. s. [Lat. hyperaspis, from the Gr. ὑπερσπίς, to protect with a shield.] A defender.

I appeal to any indifferent reader, whether C. M. be not by its hyperaspis, furnished in the plain field.

The hyperaspis of the ancient bestride their fellows fallen in battle, and covered them with their shields.

Warburton, Note on Macbeth.

HYPERBASTON. n. s. [Latin; from the Gr. ὑπερβάσις, to go beyond.] A figure in writing, when the words are transposed from the plain grammatical order.

If your meaning be with a violent hyperbation to transpose the text.

The words are at times so transposed, as to create an hyperbation.

Durall, Critical Remarks on Job, Pref.

HYPERBOLA. n. s. [ὑπερβολή, Fr.; ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Harris.

And the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

Bradley.

HYPERBOLE. n. s. [ὑπερβολή, Fr.; ὑπερ and βάλλω, Gr.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth; as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaudy, the case of a flagellated man a mansion for him.

Shakespeare.

Turns unsung'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon drops,
Would seem hyperbolas. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Tall tales, phantasies, silken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperbolas, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantic, those summer flies,
Have blown me full of ragged ostentation.

Shakespeare.

They were above the hyperbolas, that fond poetry bestows upon its indifferent objects.

Hyperbolas, so daring and so bold,
Dismissing bounds, are yet by rules contrail'd!
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.

Gravelle.

The common people understand railery, or at least ribaldry, and will not take hyperbolas in too literal a sense.

Swift.

HYPERBOLICAL. adj. [ὑπερβολικός, Fr.; HYPERBO and ΛΙΚ.] From hyperbola.

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolic lines.

Crew, Mathem.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a billock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

An hyperbolical liar, a flatterer, a parasite.

Horton, Anat. of Med. To the Italer.
Look upon vices and vicious objects with hyperbolical eyes, and rather enlarge their dimensions, than their unseem deformities may not escape thy sense.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

There are always some fools that can commend nothing but with hyperbolical expressions.

King Charles, Let. to Henderson, p. 56.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.

HYPERBOLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Boyle.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

Brown, Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBOLIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBOLIST. n. s. [from hyperbole.] One who hyperbolizes.

I cease to think the Psalmist an hyperbolist for comparing the transcendent sweetness of God's Word to that inferior one of honey, which is like it in nothing more, than in that of both their sensibilities experience gives much advantageous notions than descriptions can.

Boyle on the Style of Hol. Script. p. 253.

To HYPERBOLIZE. v. n. [from hyperbole.] To speak or write with exaggeration or extenuation.

You have heard—how some of the ancientest fathers do speak, and how they hyperbolize sometimes, in some points, in their popular sermons.

Moutaigne, App. to Cass. (1685), p. 260.

The Spanish traveller was so habituated to hyperbolize.

Hawell, Instruct. for Trav. p. 178.

Which if but a rhetorical flourish, doth yet hyperbolize into blasphemy.

Fugler, Holy War, p. 244.

To HYPERBOLIZE. v. g. To exaggerate or extenuate.

Vain people, hyperbolizing his fact—he grew by their flattery into that madness of conceit.

Faustberg, Athom. (1622), p. 203.

Come, Man,

Hyperbolized nothing! I know thy span.

Crowder, Poems, p. 96.

HYPERBOREAN. n. s. [Hyperboréen, Fr.; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

The body moulded by the climate endures

The Equator heats and Hyperborean frost.

Armstrong.

The Hyperborean Ice he wander'd o'er,
And solitary roam'd round Tanais' shore.

J. Walton's Virgil.

HYPERCATALYTIC. adj. [hyper, and catalytic.] Exceeding the measure; applied to verses having a syllable or two too many at the end.

HYPERCRITIC. n. s. [hypercritique, Fr.; hyper and critique.] A critic exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercritics in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.

Dryden.

HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritic.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilions, which some aesthetes oblige our gardeners to.

Evans.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

Seyf.

HYPERDULIA. n. s. [hyper and dulia.] A superior kind of service among the Romanists, to the Virgin Mary.

From whom our Romanists did first learn their hyperdulia, or transcendent kind of service, whereby they worship the Virgin Mary.

Alph. Usher, Anac. to the Ss. Melane, p. 286.

From all Roushish dulia, and hyperdulia, Good

Lord deliver us.

Call you this devotion, as you please, whether duly or hyperduly.

Brevint, Soul and Sam. at Endor, p. 552.

HYPERICON. n. s. [Latin.] In botany, St. John's wort.

Hypericon, called "fuga demonum," reckoned among sacred magical plants, on account of the Druids using them. Stuebel, Palaeogr. Suec. p. 16.

HYPERIMETER. n. s. [hyper and metre.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond his foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

Middleton.

HYPERPHYSICAL. adj. [hyper and physical.] Supernatural.

These are hyperphysical optics, and drawn from the heavens.

Aubrey, Miscell. p. 147.

HYPERASCOSIS. n. s. [hyperascosis, hyper and ascosis.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the Asparagosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

Wiceman.

HYPHEN. n. s. [ἑψήν, Gr.] A note of conjunction; as vir-tue, ever-living.

What a sight it is to see writers compounded together by the ears for ceremonies, syllables, points, colons, commas, hyphens, and the like.

B. Jenson, Discoveries.

HYPO-TICK. n. s. [ὑποτίκ, Gr.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

I need no better hypnotic to make me sleep.

Brown, Rel. Med.

He writes, as an hypnotic for the spleen.

Young, Eps. to Pope, l.

HYPOCHONDRES. n. s. [hypochondria, Fr.; ὑποχόνδριον, Gr.] This word at first was hypochondry, with the regular plural hypochondries. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this. See HYPOCHONDRI. The two regions lying on each side the cartilago eniformis, and those of the ribs, and the top of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen.

Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenteric arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondria; from whence such persons are called hypochondriac.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

HYPOCAUST. n. s. [ὑποκαύστις, hypocauste, Fr.] A subterranean place, in which was a furnace that served to heat the baths of the Greeks and Romans; and in modern times applied to the place which keeps warm a stove or hot-house.

The apartments on the east side—were probably warmed by the hypocaust.

Lynce, Antiq. at Woodchester, (1797.)

HYPOCHONDRIA. n. s. [from hypochondria.] Melancholy. Personified by Thomson. The proper substantive is hypochondriacism; though hypochondria has been used, but less properly.

See HYPOCHONDRIACAL.

Mapping here did Hypochondria sit,
Mourner of spleen, in robes of various dye,
Who vexed was full oft with ugly fit,
And some her frantic deem'd it, and some her deem'd it a wit.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL. adj. [hypochondria and HYPOCHONDRIAC.] driaque, Fr. from hypochondria.]

1. Of or belonging to the hypochondria; also melancholical. See the next sense.

Bullock.

2. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

A streightness of breath, which I should be glad to know whether you observe in other hypochondriacal patients.

Watson, Rem. p. 566.

3. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fevers, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such is the hypochondria, melancholy complexion of us islanders, that we secure mad of butter, every accident makes such a deep impression upon us.

Jay, Herbology, Let. (1746.) Life, &c. p. 162.

HYPOCHONDRIACK. n. s. One who is melancholy, or disordered in imagination.

How the humours of the body arrive at an ability thus to impregnate the mind with conceits wild and monstrous beyond the varieties of Africa, is an enquiry not pertinent here; but to question that so they can, is to speak ourselves strangers to all the studies of hypochondriacs [which] books and discourses abound withal.

Spencer on Valg. Pyrexia, (1665), p. 98.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriac.

Deeny of Chr. Pity.

HYPOCHONDRIACISM. n. s. [from hypochondria.] Melancholy; disordered imagination.

In hypochondriacism the insanity not being formed, there is for the most part a capacity for action.

Johnson on Melancholy, p. 25.

HYPOCHONDRIASIS. n. s. Hypochondriac affection or passion.

Mental affections produce hypochondriasis, by creating a disorder in the stomach and intestines, and in the nervous system.

Christen on Mental Derangement, p. 206.

HYPOCHONDRIA. n. s. [See HYPOCHONDRIASIS.] One of the two regions called the hypochondria. This word has been overlooked, by our lexicographers, as a noun with the singular number.

If from the liver, there is usually a pain in the right hypochondry; if from the spleen, hardness and grief in the left hypochondry.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 200.

Erry swells the hypochondria, which, by drinking up the nourishment of the neighbouring parts, makes the whole body lean and meagre.

Scott, Christian Life, p. lii. ch. 3.

HYPOCHYST. n. s. [ὑποχυστίς, Gr.; hypocystis, Fr.] Hypocist is an inspissated juice, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe; the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPOCRAS.* See HIPPOCRAS.

HYPOCRISY.† n. s. [hypocrisis, Fr. hypocrisie, Gr. from hypokrisis, to feign.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrites. 1 Pet. ii. 1.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden, Fab.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open dissimulation and vice; it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. s. [hypocrite, Fr. hypocrite; hypocritus, Gr.]
1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakespeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, it is as a ship in a storm. Eccles. xxxiii. 5.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Philips.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass Suffices virtue; but may hypocrites, Who slyly speak one thing, another think, Hatred as hell, still pleas'd unwar'd drink on; And through intem'p'rance grow a while sincere. Shakspeare.

HYPOCRITICAL.† adj. [hypocrite, Fr. hypocritique, Gr.] Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confounding your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical down-cast look. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be extorted an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.
HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [hypocritically, Fr. hypocritiquement, Gr.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, may hypocritically, abusing at once their proselytes and their religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr.; ὑπογάστρῳ, Gr.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Hucman.

HYPOGE'UM. n. s. [ὑπερ and γῆ, Gr.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS.† n. s. [hypostase, French; ὑποστάσις, Gr.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

3. In medicine, sediment of urine.

Here's an hypostasis argues a very bad stomach. Nabbes, Microcosmus.

HYPOSTATICAL.† adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carnesades warn men not to subscribe to the great doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have's little examined it. Bayle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

Beside that grounded upon the hypostatical union; beside that glorious condition upon his resurrection; there was yet another and that more proper ascription. Perrault on the Creed, Art. 6.

HYPOSTATICALLY. adv. [hypostatiquement, Fr.] Personally.

That they should see all things and transactions, hear all prayers and unions, "is speculo divinitatis," is alike incredible; a thing which the humanity of Christ himself, though hypostatically united to the divinity, did not pretend to. Mores, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

HYPO'TENUSE. n. s. [hypotenuse, French; ὑποτένυσα, Gr.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

TO HYPO'THECATE.* v. a. [Lat. hypotheca, a pledge.] To pawn; to give in pledge.

Whether they, to whom this new pledge is hypothecated, have redeemed their own; — I leave it to those, who recollect that memorable debate, to determine. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

HYPO'THESIS.† n. s. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις, Gr.] Our word was pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, new and uncouth.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved..

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contradictions that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. Smith.

What image of sovereignty Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns: He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise; And be too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise, Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHETICAL.† adj. [hypothetique, Fr. hypothetick, Gr.] from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move.  Watts.

HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetick.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broom, Notes to Pope's Ode on the HYRSE.* n. s. [German, hirse.] In botany, millet. Coles.

HYNST.† Are all from the Sax. hynst, a hynst, wood or grove. Gibson.

HY'SOP. n. s. [Aysope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Müller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL.† adj. [hysterique, Fr. hysterick, Gr.]

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Conception.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floger on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Favours of vapours, and of fits, with,

Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYSTERICK. n. s. [ὑστερικὸς, Gr.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

HYSTERN-PROTERON.* n. s. [ὑστέρων, πρότερον, Gr.] A rhetorical figure: when that is last said, which was first done. Peacock.

A Greek term, sometimes used in derision of that which is spoken or done preposterously, or quite contrary. We call it in English, The cart before the horse. Bullockar.

HYTHE.* n. s. A port. See HITHE.

I.

I

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee; thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a o or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as, jude, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

I† pronoun personal, [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch; ig, eg, Icel. ego, Latin, εγω, Gr.]

I, gen. &c. me; plural we, gen. &c. us. Sax. ic. dat. &c. me; plural pe, dat. &c. up. Goth. ik gen. meina; plural weis, dat. &c. uns, unsis.

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself. I do not like these several councils, I.

Shakespeare, Rich. III. There is none greater in this house than I.

Gen. xxix. 9. Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid.

What shall I do to be ever known, And make the age to come my own?

I shall like beauty or common people die, Unless you write my elegy. Conley.

Hence, and make room for me! Conley. When chance of business parts us two, What do our souls, I wonder, do?

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain, To my longing friends return again. Dryden, Zen.

Of night impatient we demand the day, The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. I is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can love, and that is me. Richardson, Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yes.—Dr. Johnson.—It was usual in the time of Shakespeare, and later, to write the affirmative article ay in the form of I, and was not merely poetical custom.

J A C

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I, And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shaks.

Did your letters pierce the queen? —I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence;

And now and then a simple tear will'd down. Shakspeare.

I, now the spheres are in their tunes again. Dr. Johnson, Masques at Court.

There cannot be imagined an example more exactly suiting, more closely applicable to his intent, which was not to discredit and dishearten his followers, by comparing, I, and preferring the cunning of an ordinary fellow.

Cullingworth, Works, (ed. 1704,) p. 581.

4. I, prefixed to a word, is common in our old language, as well as y; as ibrought, ibuilt, yobuilt, ybleased; and is the Saxon prepositive particle ge. It is merely a redundancy.

To JABBER.† v. n. [gabbaren, Dutch. See To GAB, and To GABBLE. Jabber is old in our language; though Dr. Johnson maintains it only by the modern authority of Swift.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

Conynghe, Latyne jabberings, and wawlyngs, according to the office of saynt Antonynes personage. Bale, Tet a Courte, &c. (1545,) fol. 43. b.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber Of parties. Swift.

JABBER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Garrulity; prating. Bishop Fleetwood somewhere uses the word in his works; and it is still a colloquial term.

JABBERER.* n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

JABBERMENT.* n. s. [from jabber.] Idle talk; prate.

We are come to his farewell, which is to be a concluding taste of his jabberment in the law. Milton, Cadastrian.

JABBERNOWL.* See JÖBBERNOWL.

JACENT. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt to swagger down to pierce than in the jaunt posture. Watson, Architect.

JACINTH.* n. s. [for hycinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hycinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK.† n. s. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James. Dr. Johnson.—Jak, Jaky, old French. Kelham.—I know not how it has happened, that, in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence zany; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer uses Jack fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose Jack ass has the same etymology. Tyrwhitt.]

J A C

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paucity fellows.

I know some pepper-nosed dame Will term me fool and saucy Jack, That dars their credit so defame, And lay such slanders on their back.

H. Gifford, Poem of Gallinflowers, (1580.) Since every Jack became a gentleman, There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

You will perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus. Shaks. Coriol. I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of those bragging Jacks, Which I will practise. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven. Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shakspeare, Cymb.

A company of scoffers and proud Jacks are customarily conversant and attendant in such places. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 991.

I met some Jack lords going into my grove, but I think I have settled them!

Dr. Ward, Pope's Life of Ward, p. 47. Such, especially if they are broken gamblers, I will say are no better than Jack gentlemen.

Dr. Parker, Rehears. Transp. p. 460.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of Jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters' boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts, Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindle; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Mason, Mech. Es.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Watson, Surgery.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks.

4. A young pike. [perhaps from the Lat. jaculum. Skinner.]

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. A coat of mail, [old French jaque, or jake; Germ. jacke; Dutch; jack; Ital. giacco.] A coat of mail; a kind of military coat put over the coat of mail.

The residue were no foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hoywood.

6. A cup of waxed leather. See BLACK-JACK.

Small jacks we have in many ale-houses of the city and suburbs, tipit with silver.

Hoywood. Drunkard opened, &c. (1655.) p. 45. Dend wine, that stinks of the borraheo, put From a foul jack, or greedy tangle-cup.

Dryden, Pers.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poisoned, and thrown upon a plain bowling green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bradley.

8. A part of the musical instruments called a virginal, a harpsichord, a spinet.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falls, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

Those jacks that nimble leap To kiss the tender inward of thy hand.

Shakespeare, Sonn.

Your teeth did dance like virginal jacks.

R. Jonson, Eur.

It plays on the harpicon the while, whose waves are the pebble stones, checking the little waves as strings. Park, Sacra. p. 210.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Clints.

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsworth.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship.

Nothing was to be seen aloft but ensigns, jacks, streamers, and the heads of sailors.

Drammond, Trav. p. 71.

12. In Yorkshire, half a pint. Grose. A quarter of a pint. Pegge.

13. A cunning fellow who can turn to anything, in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and sound; An inverse barce, an exchange under ground.

Cleveland.

14. Used by Shakespeare for Jack with the lantern.

Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

- JACK BOOTS. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commodore and a night-rail.

Spectator.

- JACK by the Hedge. n. s. Erysimum.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other salads are, and much used in broth.

Mortimer.

- JACK of the Clock-house. n. s. The little man that strikes the quarters in a clock, jaquetel. Cotgrave. This kind of automation may yet be seen in some of our market-towns, as well as at St. Dunstan's church in London.

My time Runs posting on in Balingbrooke's proud joy, While I stand fooling here, his Jack's at the clock. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Is this your Jack of the clock-house? Will you strike, sir? Bacon. and Fl. Cornwall.

- JACK PUDDING. n. s. [jack and pudding.] A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack-pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover.

L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every name of the name of the dish they like best: in French jean potage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding in his party-colour'd jacket, Tosses the glove, and jukes at every packet. Gay.

- JACK SAUCE. n. s. An impudent fellow; a saucy Jack. Hulot and Minshew.

His reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack sauce.

- JACK with a Lantern. † An ignis fatuus. See IGNIS FATUUS. Written also Jack-a-lantern.

Pleoty of inflammable sulphureous matter in the air, such as ignis fatui, or jack-a-lanterns, and the meteors which are called falling stars.

Stroph. Helen on Euripides, (1750.) p. 10. He has played Jack with a lantern, he has led us about like an ignis fatuus, by which travellers are decoyed into the mire.

Johnson, Note on Shakespeare's Tempest.

- JACKADANDY. n. s. [jack and dandy.] A little impertinent fellow. See DANDIPRAT. In this sense it is still a northern word. See Craven Dialect, where the Tent danten, to play the fool, is cited for the etymology. The word is generally used in contempt.

JACKALANT. n. s. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow. Dr. Johnson.] — The word is not so. A Jack-a-Lent was a puppet formerly thrown at in Lent, like shrove-cakes. Neither is Dr. Johnson's definition of a "simple, sheepish fellow" applicable to the alibi which he cites from Shakespeare. It is there applied to Falstaff's page, little Robin, an intelligent lad, in a joking manner.]

A sort of puppet. You little jackalant, have you been true to us? — Ay, I'll be sworn.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

On an Ash-Wednesday, Where thou didst stand six weeks the Jack o' Fat, For boys to hurl three throws a penny at thee.

B. Jonson, Tumb. of a Tub.

Push-pin is too high for him; he is hit for no other employment than to catch shillows and jackalants; for though they are meer nothing, yet to children they appear as it were something.

Bp. Parker, Rector, Trunoy. p. 204.

- JACKA'L. † n. s. [chacal, Fr. from the Persian schakal, which is also written shegal, and is from the Hebrew shual. See Pocock's Comm. on Malachi, ch. i. ver. 3.] A small animal supposed to stand prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear, And raking chase-guns, through our sterns they send;

Close by their frontiers, like jackals appear, Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

- JACKANAPET. n. s. [jack and ape. Dr. Johnson.] — The second sense, applied to a coxcomb or impertinent person, is very old in our language. Skelton says,

"He grins and he gapes, "As it were Jack Napes."

Poems, p. 160.

And Bale, "He played Jack-an-apes, swearing by his tenne bones." Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, 1543, fol. 92. And so Marston, "Down, Jack-an-ape, from thy feign'd royalty." Scourge of Villany, B. 3. Sat. 5. (1599.) This naturally refers us to the tricks of the ape; and the corruption of Jack Napes is easily accounted for by the various writing or pronunciation of that word. Ape is a word of great antiquity.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

I believe he hath said'st a jackanapes of his gesture; mark but his countenance; see how he mopes, and how he cowers, and how he strains his looke! Reche, Faults, &c. (1606.) p. 7.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?

— That jackanapes with scuffs. Shakespeare.

People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him.

Arbuthnot.

- JACKANAS. * See the etymology of JACK, and Dr. Johnson's ninth definition of that word.

- JACKDAW. † n. s. [from jack and daw, Dr. Johnson says; calling it "a cock daw." — It is the Teut. gacke, the "menudela" or daw, with the addition of our own word.] A species of the crow.

Not only all unto Esop's clough, whom we commonly call Jackdaw.

Dale, Yet a Course, &c. (1545.) fol. 87.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that waits the shape of man. Watts.

- JACKET. n. s. [jaquette, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red.

Spenser, Hobbs. Tale.

And hens and dogs and hogs are feeding by; And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Pope.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the feet of the person, who stood gaping at her.

2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

Heath then a snoring quill that I may write, As with a Jacob's staff to take her blight.

Cleveland, Rec. to his Mistress, p. 11.

Why on a sign no painter draws The full-moon ever, but the half,

Resolve that with your Jacob's staff.

Widdriss, ii. iii.

- JACOBIN, or JACOBINE. * n. s. [Fr. Jacobin, from Jacob, as having some pretended reference or allusion to St. James.]

3 x

1. A friar of the order of St. Dominick; a gray or white friar.

Now I am Robert, now Robin,
Now first Minor, now Jacobine.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6398.

This king went in danger of his life, a long while sought by a couplet — what he long was taken and executed together with another Jacobine for the same crime.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. One of an execrable faction in the late French democratical revolution, distinguished by their hatred of religion, monarchy, and social order; so called from their meeting at the church of St. Jacobus, or a monastery of the Jacobin friars; one who approves or maintains the principles of such.

With the Jacobins of France, vague intercourse is without reproach; marriage is reduced to the vilest courtesies; children are encouraged to cut the throats of their parents; mothers are taught that tenderness is no part of their character.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

We are not to conclude that all who are Jacobins are conscientiously attached to the established church.

Sp. Harlequin, Charge.

- JACOBIN.* adj. Of the principles of Jacobinical; modern Jacobins.

They knew from the beginning that the Jacobin party was not confined to that country.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

- JACOBINISM.* n. s. The principles of a modern Jacobine.

When to these establishments of regicide, of Jacobinism, and of atheism, you add the corresponding system of manners, no doubt can be left on the mind of a thinking man, concerning their determined hostility to the human race.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

May the more recent spirit of Jacobinism have a still quicker termination.

Mauro, Note to Isis.

- To JACOBINIZE.* v. a. To infect with Jacobinism.

France was not then Jacobinized. Burke.

- JACOBINE.* n. s. A pigeon with a high tuft.

Ainsworth.

- JACOBITE.* n. s. One of a sect of heretics, who were anciently a branch of the Eutychians, and are still subsisting in the Levant.

The Jacobites took their denomination from one Jacob, a Syrian, who began to disseminate his doctrines in the East about the close of the sixth century. His sect are sometimes distinguished by the name of Monophysites, the progeny of the Eutychians, who asserted the single nature of Christ, in opposition to the orthodox, who maintained that his nature was twofold, human and divine.

Professor White's Sermon. Notes, p. 12.

2. One attached to the cause of king James the second after his abdication, and to his line. [from Jacobus, Lat. for James.]

He is writing an epigram to a young virgin, who knits very well: It is a thousand pities he is a Jacobite; but his epigram is by way of doing this damsel, to knit all the actions of the Pretender, and the duke of Burgundy's last campaign, in the clock of a stocking. Tatler, No. 3.

- JACOBITE.* adj. [from the noun.] Of the principles of Jacobites.

The whole story party was become avowedly Jacobite.

Ld. Balinghame.

- JACOBITISM.* n. s. The principles of a Jacobite.

The spirit of Jacobitism, which had obtained in both our universities before the year 1745, was far from being quite extinguished in 1748.

Mauro, Note to Isis.

JACOBUS.* n. s. [Lat.] A gold coin, worth twenty-five shillings, so called from king James the first of England, in whose reign it was struck.

The women have taken a fancy to prefer guineas and Jacobuses.

L'Esrange, Tr. of Quercus, p. 273.

- JACKSMITH.* n. s. [jack and smith.] A maker of the engine called a jack.

Tompon, the celebrated watchmaker, was originally a jacksmith.

Malone, Note on Dryden, l. li. 49.

- JACTANCY.* n. s. [old French jactance, jactance, Lacombe; jactantia, Lat.] Boasting.

Cockeram.

- JACTATION.* n. s. [jactio, Lat.]

1. Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving. If the patient be surprised with jactation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials.

Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

- To JACULATE.* v. a. [Latin, jaculo.] To dart.

Cockeram.

- JACULATION.* n. s. [jactulatio, Lat.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

It was well and strongly strung with 26 barrels of gunpowder, great and small, for the more violent jaculation, vibration, and speed of the arrows.

Deen King, Sermon, 5. Nov. (1608), p. 20.

So hills amid the air encounter'd idles, Hur'd to and fro with jaculation dies.

Milton, P. L.

- JACULATORY.* adj. [from To jaculate or Fr. jaculatoire.]

1. Throwing out. Bullock.

2. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences; ejaculatory.

Jaculatory prayers are the nearest dispositions to contemplation.

Sp. Comp. Maxims of Myst. Divin. (1631), p. 81.

- JADE.* n. s. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gand, a goad or spur. Dr. Johnson — Hickes and Scerpius observe that the heel-jalk, or jaekel, is an aged horse; from jad, loss of teeth.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag; and sometimes a vicious horse.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart! I am as dull as winter-storied sheep.

Sidney.

Tri'd as a jade in everlastingly cart. When they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks, With torchestakes in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakespeare.

If we like when your honour spur us, We are knaves and jades.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

So have I seen with armed heel, While still the more he kick'd and spur'd;

The less the culter jade had stir'd. Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Esrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race, As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace.

Page.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags: — The squyre, arriving, fiercely in his arms

Soath'd d the first the one, and then the other Symonds, F. Q.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower

Of youth, that have you, pass you? Chapman.

But she, the cunning d jade alive,

Says 'tis the ready way to this. Shakespeare.

Get in, tussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue.

Southern, Innocent Adultery.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades, She shines the first of jades; the first

And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman; in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes.

Addison.

- JADE.* n. s. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres.

Hill.

- To JADE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary; applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The w'er-yet-least horse of Parthia

We've jaded out of the field.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermix speech of the present occasion with arguments for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far.

Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proven jaded, and in frequent matches cast No favour for the stallion we retain, And no respect for the degenerate strain.

Dryden, Juc.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again.

Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtaxed or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation.

Watts, Logic.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this.

Shakespeare, Tem. Night.

- To JADE.* v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire to the prosecution.

South.

- JADERY.* n. s. [from jade.] Jadish tricks.

Seeks all foul means Of boisterous and rough, jodery, to censure His load that kept it bravely.

Brown, and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

J A'NISH.† adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad; as an horse.

If an ass did kick, &c. some will for such jaded tricks give the ass his due burden of baseness. Florida's First Fruits, &c. (1598.) Pref.
That baw'd us on their licks, to show us
A jaded trick at last, and those us, Hudibras.
When once the people get the jaded trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe.

Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jaded, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest.

L'Esrange.

To JAG.† v. a. [gaggen, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

To advance your flesh, you cut and jage your clothes.

Mortality of Lusty Jerevintz (temp. Edw. VI.)
To what end dost we jage and gash the garments, that are sewed together to cover our bodies? Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon, p. 239.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jags or escallops, and curiously indented along the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jags in the live and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A small parcel of any thing; a small load of hay or corn. In Norfolk and Suffolk it is called a burgain. See Grose, and Wilbraham's and Moore's Glossaries.

The latter of these two letters is come abroad; whereof, because it is in many hands, some jags will suffice to be rectified.

Black's Life of Abp. Williams, (1695.) p. 136.

J A'GGEDNESS. n. s. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your lines, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Penckon on Drawing.

J A'GGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were all'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;

His teeth stood jagged in three dreadful rows.

Addison.

Amid those angles, infinitely eternal'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy walls behind.

Thomson.

JAIL.† n. s. [geol, Welsh; geode, or rather gaiole, Fr. gicel, Su. Goth. But see Gaol.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. It is written either gaol or jail, but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him.
A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had been view'd. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

J A'ILBIRD. n. s. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

J A'ILER. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunn'd it, seeing and disdaining his suit, as because of her jealous jaillers. Sedgwick.

This is a jail, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailler of the wind;
With loose commands his breasting subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden, Æn.

Palamon, the prisoner knight,
Beside for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailler's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more wholesome than the dmy length. Dryden.

JAKES.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology.

Dr. Johnson. — From the Lat. caecare; Sax. cac-hure, a privy. Minshew, Skinner, and Lye. — Or, perhaps, from the Lat. jactio, jactus, thrown into, cast into.] A privy; a little house accommodated with a place to receive the excrements; "a common draught." Huloet. Dr. Johnson's examples of this word exhibit it as a noun having the plural number only; but it was used in the singular, having the same form.

Such therefore is this house; — and not this jakes, built upon men's traditions with mouldy and rotten wood.
Harnar, Tr. of Bras's (1587.) p. 200.
I will treat this unbelov'd villain into mortar, and dash the walls of jakes with him. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

From thence, as from an infernal jakes, do issue the most infamous vices, and execrable actions that can be committed by men.

Their sordid marice rakes
In excrements, and lures the very jakes. Dryden, Juv.

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

J A'LA'P. n. s. [jalap, Fr. jalapinum, low Lat.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy, and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapinum, or japala, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madagascars. It is an excellent purgative where serious humours are to be evacuated. Hill, Mat. Med.

JAM.† n. s. [I know not whence derived.]

1. A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

2. A sort of froek for children.

The long muslin dress, usually worn in India, both by Hindus and Mahomedans, is called jamana; whence the dress well known in England, and worn by children, is usually called a jam. Hodges, Travels, p. 3.

3. A thick bed of stone, which hinders the work of the lead-miners, when they are pursuing the veins of ore. The language of the lead-miners in Mendip.

Chambers.

To JAM.* v. a. [I know not the etymology.]

1. To squeeze closely; to enclose any object between two bodies, so as to render it immovable.

2. To render firm by treading, as cattle do the land they are foddered on. North. Grose.

JAMA'ICA Pepper.* See ALLSPICE.

JAMB. n. s. [jambe, Fr. a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jambs. Mason, Arch. Etern.

JAMBREUX.* n. s. [Fr. jambes. See GIAMBEUX.] Armour for the legs.

One for his legs and knees provided well,
With jambreux arm'd, and double plates of steel. Dryden, Pel. and Arcite.

JAMBE'E.* n. s. A name formerly for a fashionable sort of cane.

Sir Timothy, who is a true jambée; and esquire Emphy's only a plain dragon. — This virtuoso has a parcel of jambées now growing in the East Indies. Tatler, No. 142.

J A'MBIK. n. s. [jambique, Fr. jambic, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies;
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambick, but mild anagram. Dryden.

J A'MBIK.* adj. Composed of iambick feet.

Aristotle observes, that the iambick verse in the Greek tongue was the most proper for tragedy; because, at the same time that it lifted up the discourse from prose, it was that which approached nearest to that any other kind of verse. Addison, Spectr, No. 39.

JANE.* n. s.

1. A coin of Genoa. Skinner. "Dear enough a jane." Chaucer.

I could not give her many a jane.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 58.

2. A kind of fustian; a word still in use. Whether from Genoa, or, as Fuller derives it, from Jen, I. e. Jena, in Saxony, in his Worthies, (under Lanchashire,) I am unable to say.

Two yards of jyne fustiane to lye a dublet for Mr. John. Tillot, Accounts, 1580.

To J A'NGLE.* v. n. [jangler, old Fr. Skinner, jaengla, Su. Goth.] To alternate; to quarrel; to bicker in words.

Now a low word; formerly much used by our old writers; and in the sense of to prate, to babble, which Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed.

1. To prate; to talk idly or inconsiderately. My son, be thou none of tho

To jangle, and tell tales so. Chaucer, Conf. Am. b. 5.

Of sundry dantes thus they jangle and trete. Chaucer, Spec. Tale.

Wife is not in the Scriptures called an impediment or necessary evil, as certain poets and bawling men, who hated women, have foolishly jangled. Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon, p. 258.

Whether any have used to commune, jangle, and talk in the church.

Articles of Visitation by Abp. Cranmer.

A vain humour he hath in building, bragging, jangling, spending, gaming.
Hamlet, Act. of Mel. To the Reader.
A jangling noise of words unknown.
Milton, P. L.

2. To quarrel; to bicker in words.
Good wits will be jangling too, gentlemen agree,
This civil war of wits were much better w'd
On Navarre and his book-men.

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.
There is an error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling.
Raleigh.

To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunably.
Now say that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh.

Ere Godlike forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse ere monkish rhymes
Had jangled their fantastic chimes.
Prior.

JANGLE. * n. s. [old Fr. jan-gle.]
1. Prate; babble.
This companion — was full of jangles, —
And ever enquiring upon every thing.
Chaucer, Fr. Tale.

2. Discordant sound.
The mail jangle of Matilda's lyre.
The Masnad.

JANGLE. * n. s. [from the verb; old
Fr. jan-gler.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow; a prater.
A tongue cuteth friendship all atwain;
A jangler is to God abominable.
Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.
News-carriers, janglers, and such like also con-panions.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

JANGLING. * n. s. [from jan-gle.]
1. Babble; mere prate.
The end of the commendation is clarity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned; from which some having swerved, have turned aside unto vain jangling, [vain discourse] desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.
1 Tim. i. 6.

2. Dispute; altercation; quarrel.
So far am I glad it did so sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.
They lose their respect towards us from this jangling of ours.
Guardian, No. 73.

JA'NITOR. * n. s. [Latin.] A door-keeper;
a porter.
The janitor of the stately hall drove away slumbers.
Warton, Notes on Milton's Sp. Poems.

JA'NIZARY. * n. s. [A Turkish word.
"Janizary" apud Turcas significat novum ordinem. Nam Jani est novum, et Zar ordo; id est autem dictus ordo ille novus, quia illum ultimum Turcae invenerunt.
Alii Janizarios dictos volunt, quasi janit-tores, quia semper proximi sunt ad Im-peratorum, certat proximiores aliis.
Criticuli Eminentiae, et Animad. in Meursii Gloss. p. 26.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizier, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd it haste to rise;
The standard's lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.
Next follow his best footmen, called janizaries, taken young from their christian parents, [parallel to the Roman praetorian soldiers] being the guard of the grand signior's person.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 263.

JANIZARIAN. * adj. [from janizary.] Of the command or government of janizaries.

I never shall so far injure the janizarian republic of Algiers, as to put it in comparison for every sort of crime, turpitude, and oppression, with the jacobin republic of Paris.

JANNOCK. n. s. [probably a corruption of jan-neck.] Out bread. A northern word.
JA'NNECK. * n. s. The doctrine of Cornelius Jansen, bishop of Ypres, in Flanders; which made no great noise in the world till after the death of its author in 1638. It related chiefly to grace and freewill. To his work, which was published after his death, he had been induced by the controversy at the beginning of the seventeenth century, between the Jesuits and Dominicans, concerning the nature and necessity of divine grace.

JA'NNEST. * n. s. One who espouses the opinions of Jansen.

He was a Jannest; he hated the Jesuits.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1671.

JA'NTY. * adj. [corrupted from gentil,
Fr. Dr. Johnson. — But see GENT.]
Such also is the Teut. frut, pretty. Dr.
Johnson has observed, that Bailey gives what seems the proper sense of this word, viz. "romping, wanton;" and he barely notices Dr. Johnson's definition of "showy, flustering." Append to his Etym. Dict. But Dr. Johnson is right; and Bailey's sense must be sought elsewhere than in our authors of note.
I confirm Dr. Johnson's sense by four examples, to which "romping and wanton" can have no claim.] Showy; fluttering; finical.

Not every one that brings from beyond seas a new gin, or other jansty device, is therefore a philosopher.
Hobbes Considerations, (1662).
This sort of woman is a jansty slattern;
she hangs on her clothes, plays her head, and varies her posture.
Spectator.

Such jansty scribbles are justly laughed at for their want of plainness and clarity, and of logical descriptions in them.
Taiter, No. 9.

A jansty link is the present beauty.
Taiter, No. 77.
What though they dress so fine and jansty?
Warton, Utop. Novum. Versus, (1700).

JA'NTINESS. n. s. [from jansty.] Airiness;
flutter; carelessness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that janntiness of air I was once master of.
Addison, Spect.
JA'NTIUS. n. s. [Januarius, Lat.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was, among the Romans, consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his sails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence.
Pemken.

JAPAN. n. s. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large jojan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Seyfl.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.
Nor but the sleek with silver nails,
Nor furcoat of expatience,
Nor stanch well jojan'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Seyfl.
2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The good of fire
Among these generous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new jojaning art.
Gay, Trivia.

JAPA'NNER. n. s. [from jojan.]
1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same lark;
They change their weekly labour, weekly news;
Prefer a new jojaner to their shoes. Pope, Horace.
To JAPE. * v. n. [Icel. geipa, to utter foolish or light words; to jest; allied to the verb geip, old Fr. joip. Lye deduces it from the Armor. goap, irrisio, goapat, irridere; whence, he adds, the
Fr. joip.] To jest. Obsolete.

To jojan he began. Chaucer, Prolog. to Sir Trophes.

To JAPE. v. n. [Sax. zeap, cunning, crafty.]
Thus hath he jojed thee full many a year.

Chaucer, An. Tale.
2. To sport with; to wanton with. In both senses obsolete.
JAPE. * n. s. [Icel. geip.] A jest; a trick.
Obsolete.

He had a jope of malice in the back.

JA'FER. * n. s. [from jope.] A jester; a buffoon. Obsolete.
After this cometh the dinne of jojers, that ben the devils apes. Chaucer, Pers. Tale.
They ben but jugglers and jojers.

To JAR. * v. n. [from ceppie, anger, Sax. s.
or gurre, Fr. jarre, or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]
1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung.
Dryden.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.
2. To strike or sound untunably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakespeare, A. Lear.
I perceive you delight not in music.
— Not a wail, when I jar so.
Shakespeare.
A jering may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim.
Racine.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion duly harmoniz'd.
Amid a jerring world. Thomson, Summer.
3. To strike or vibrate regularly; to repeat the same sound or noise.

My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.
The old shrieking, the tooth-creaking, the minutes jerring, and the clock striking twelve.

Kyd, Spanish Trag. (1601).
He hears no waking clock, nor watch to jerr.
Hicynod, Troja Britann. iv. 107. (1609).
4. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.
Shakespeare.

For orders and degrees

Jar not with liberty, but will consist. Milton, P. L.

Venulus concluded his report:

A jarring murmur fill'd the factories court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Rears horrible. Dryden, En.

5. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did
jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then (Uphesus with his harp their strife did bar.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

To JAR, v. a.

1. To make to jar, or sound untunably.

When once they [bells] jar and check each other, jangling together, or striking pro-prietarily, how harsh and unpleasant a that noise? Rip. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 80.

2. To shake; to agitate.

JAR, † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar.
Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Harsh sound; discord.

Harsh ill-sounding jars
Of clamorous sin, that all our music macks.
Milton, at a Solemn Musick, (MS. reading).

3. A repetition of the noise made by the pendulum of a clock. See the third sense of the verb.

I love thee not a jar o'clock behind
What lady she her lord. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

4. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar;
O miserable men, that to him subject are!

Spenser, F. Q.
Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are Upon this point, we will appease our jar.

Spenser, Habs. Tale.
Force would be right; or rather right and wrong.

Between whose endless jar justice prevails,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too.
Shakespeare.

5. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened; that is, on the turn; gyras, Lat. a turning about;
zyran, Sax. to turn.

The chattering with dissenters, and dodglog about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few windows, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

6. An earthen vessel. [Spanish, jarro; Ital.
giarro.]

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He used for cooling drink prepares,
Of origin honey in the jar. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

To JAR, v. a. To bemitre; to daggle; to wet. A northern word. Dr.
Johnson says it is jarle. See To JAVEL.
The Yorkshire Glossary, and the still more northern pronunciation in Cumberland, is jarle.

JARDES, n. s. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the hump on the outside.
This distemper in time, will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches.

Farrier's Dict.

To JAR, † n. s. [Sn. Goth. jerga.] To emit a shrill or harsh sound.

Oh, Hercules! —
Thy mother could for thee thy cradle set
Her husband's rusty iron casket;
Whose jarring sound might rock her babe to rest.
Rip. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

JAR, † n. s. [jargon, Fr. gergon, Ital.
Perhaps, as Serenius observes, from the Sn. Goth. jerga.] † eadem oberrare chorda." Formerly we had the verb in the sense of prate or chatter; and I find no occurrence of the substantive so early as that of the verb in the following lines from Gower's fifth book of his Confessio Amantis:

"When he thir tongue reft,
"A littel part thereof he leste;
"But she withall no worde maie sowne,
"But chitre, and as a byrde jargone."
The French have the verb jargonner.
Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematics, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Dn. Brownhill.

From this last told again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessors' rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastic jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARGON, † n. s. A species of prate.

See PEAR.

JARRING, † n. s. [from jar.] Quarrel; dispute.

Polygamy occasions perpetual jarrings, and jealousies. Burnet, Life of Ed. Rochester, p. 113.

JARREY, † See JERSEY.

JARREY, † n. s. [corrupted from jarrey, or jerrey, which Bailey calls "the finest wool, separated from the rest by combing." A worsted wig; and in some places a colloquial term for any wig.

JASHAWK, † n. s. [probably haw or cyns hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JASMIN, † n. s. [gelsimium; jasmin, Fr.
It is often pronounced jesamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

As like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander.

Thomson.

JASMIN, † Persian. n. s. A plant. A species of lilac.

JASP, † { n. s. [jasp, Fr. jaspe, Lat.]

JASPER, † A hard stone of a bright, beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China.

Hill, Mat. Med.

The floor of jasp and emerald was dight.

Spenser, Vis. of Belloy.
The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue,
and spotted with red, yellow, and white.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the Vaticano library. Addition on Italy.

JATROPHICK, † adj. [jatropleque, Fr.
jalpis and azizpis, Gr.] That which cures by anointing.

To JAVEL, or JAVEL, † v. t. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling.
This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties. Dr. Johnson. — To jarble, as I before observed, is our northern word. Nevertheless, jarble, in our old language, is found for jarvel. See the substantive. Of its etymology I am ignorant.

JAVEL, † n. s. [perhaps from the verb.]

A wandering or dirty fellow.

What, tho jabell, canst not have to do?
Thou and thy company shall not depart,
Tyll of our distavys ye have take part.

Mystery of Coddman-Dee, (1512).
When as Time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.

Spenser, Habs. Tale.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, where the licentiant compelled him to put off again, saying,
That he who should have died was but a javel.
What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a
javel, who shall this day do me to great a benefit?

More, Life of Sir Tho. More.

JAVELIN, † n. s. [javeline, Fr.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds.

Milton, P. L.
She shakes her myrtle javelin; aed, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind.

Dryden, En.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm?

Addison, Cato.

JAUM, † n. s. The language of carpenters, and also of our northern counties, for jamb. See JAMB. It was formerly written jaumb.

To JAUNCE, v. n. [Fr. jaunce, "to jaunt, an old word." Cotgrave.] To bustle about; to jaunt.

This is the true reading in the following passage, which Dr.
Johnson has converted into jaunting,
and affixed as an authority to jaunt.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolognolero.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

JAU, † n. s. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper on obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastric arteries, which go off from the stomach, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom.

Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice By being sober? Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Those were thy thoughts, and those could'st judge aright, Till rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the cool, tinged with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JAUNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that's t'infected say, As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

TO JAUNT. v. n. [originally jaunce; Fr. jancer, an old word. See TO JAUCE.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

O, my back, my back! Beshrew your heart for sending me slumb, To catch my death with jaunting up and down. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

I'm weary with the walk, My jaunting days are done. Beaumont and Fl. Wit at sex. Weapons.

JAUNT. v. n. [from the verb.]

1. Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour trock, and with untrobbled mind, After his airy jaunt, though hurried sore, Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton, P. R.

He sends me out on many a jaunt, Old ladies in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away paces the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for one who can foot it furthest. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Thus truce of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these misallack and mineral bodies. Woodward.

2. The fellow of a wheel. [Fr. jante.]

JAUNTINESS. See JANTINESS.

JAUNTY. See JANTRY.

JAW. n. s. [Fr. joue, a cheek, Fr. whence jauchou, or cheekbone, then jaw, Dr. Johnson.—This word, it must be observed, was formerly written chaw. "The chaw bone. The chaves." Barret's Alv.

1580. The etymon of the verb chaw will therefore, perhaps, be more satisfactory. See TO CHAW. Serenus notices the Sux, zeag, mandibula, maxilla; and the Icel. jagl, dens molaris.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives to devour the poor. Prov. xxi. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pigs are very medicinal. Walton, Angler.

Froo, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith, that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable. Grew, Museum.

More formidable hydra stands within, Whose jaw with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden, Æn.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thus hast brought me into the dust of death. Psal. xlii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakespeare, Othello.

A sneaky foam works o'er my grinding jaws, And utmost anguish shakes my labouring frame. Rice.

3. In low language; gross abuse.

TO JAW. v. a. In low language, to abuse grossly; used also in Scotland, "to assault one with coarse railery." Dr. Jamieson.

JA'WED. adj. [from jaw.] Denoting the appearance of the jaws.

Jawed like a jetty. Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

JA'WALL. n. s. [jaw and fall.] Depression of the jaw; figuratively, depression of mind or spirits. So CHAP-FALLEN.

We find the Jews—desperately sick of this veniginous disease; for they had their dukes, or leaders;—and for a time they had an inter-regnum, no king in Israel, beside divers other herid infidelity in government.

Dr. M. Griffith, Fear of God & the King, (1660), p. 61.

TO JAWN. v. n. [See CHAUN, and TO CHAWN.] To open.

Stop his jawning claps. Marton, Source of Vill. l. 5. (1599).

JA'WY. adj. [from jaw.] Relating to the jaws.

The dewlaps and the jawny part of the face. Guyton on D. Quinze, p. 42.

JAV. n. s. [named from his cry. Skinner and Dr. Johnson.—The bird has much the same name in other languages; gay, gary, old Teut.; gay, gey, Fr.;

kaa, Dan. "The jay, that chattering bird, which has found its way into so many languages, is nothing but the jave; and it might easily be proved, that all its various names are derived from this idea." Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 192.

Isidore supposes the Latin name of this bird, granulus, to be derived from garulatus, its prating;] A bird; piaglan-daria.

Two sharp-winged sheers, Decked with diverse plumes, like painted jays, Were fixed at his back to cut his airy ways. Spenser, F. Q.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross water pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.

What is the jay more precious than the lark, Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakespeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insect's gilded wings? Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings? Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. s. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

JA'IS. n. s. The name of an Egyptian bird, approaching to the stork-kind.

A certain bird called ia, about the banks of the Nile, first taught the Egyptians the way of administering clysters; for this bird has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intronitted into its own, to inject salt-water, as with a syringe, into its anus bowels, and thereby to exonerate its paunch when too much obstructed. Grew, Mus. p. 252.

ICE. n. s. [Fr. Sax. : eysa, Dutch; ij, Swed. allied, as Lye thinks, to the Icel. iakti, large fragments of ice.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice. Or halstone in the sun. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Those art all ice, thy kindness frozen. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

If I should ask whether fire and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. TO BREAK THE ICE. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this first, Achieve the elder, set the younger free For our access, whose lap shall be to have her, Will not so graciously be to ingrate. Shakespeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Pemham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd it wise, At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

TO ICE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

'Tis crystal, friend, 'tis in the frozen sea. P. Fletcher, Fair. Eclog. v. 11.

2. To cover with concreted sugar; to cover as with sugar.

Noise, and passion, and hardy confidence, cut over with some sanctionless pretences, can engage the affections of the vulgar more than ingraty and real moderation.

Fuller, Modesty of the Ch. of Eng. Pref. (1679).

3. To chill; to freeze.

IC'EBUILT. adj. [ice and build.] Formed of heaps of ice.

Where shaggy forms o'er ic'ebuilt mountain roam. Cray, Prog. of Poetry.

IC'EHOTUS. n. s. [ice and house.] A house, in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

IC'ELAND. n. s. A native of Iceland.

The aspirations of the consonants, so frequent in the English, are the leading marks to a Northern derivation; so that an Icelandic, hearing this in the mouth of an Englishman, will go no farther than to his own language, and is sure to find either the same word, or the root of it, with very few alterations.

Serenus, Pref. to his Eng. and Sax. Dict.

IC'HEUMON. n. s. [Ichneumon, Gr.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

The crocodile—is said by none more than the ichneumon. N. T. Herber, Trans. p. 364.

The ichneumon makes it the whole business of his life to break the eggs of the crocodile. Addison, Spect. No. 196.

IC'HEUMONFLY. n. s. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other synapse of insects. Darwin, Physics-Thon.

IC'INOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from icnograph; Fr. ichnographie.] Representing a certain plot of ground.

Fernault has assisted the text with a figure, or *ichnograph*al plot. Fleurbaey, li. i. 1.

Here you have the *icnograph*ical plan of the temple of Janus. Drummond, Trans. p. 116.

IC'INOGRAPHY. n. s. [icn; and γράφω, Gr.; icnograph.] A ground plot.

The inspection alone of those curious *icnograph*ical temples and palaces. Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 268.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front to a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the ground-plan or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself. Mason.

ICHOR. n. s. [ichor, Gr.] A thin watery humour like serum. Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrefy, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor. Abelardus on Aliments.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous; sanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is converted to a superficial sanious or ichorous excretion. Harvey on Consumptions.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Boerhaave on Diet.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. s. [ichthyologie, French; ἰχθυολογία, and ἰχθυό and ἰχθυος, Gr.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. s. [ἰχθυό and φάγω, Gr.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE. n. s. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subsiding powder, dried, retains some magnetic virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards duth shoot into icicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

From locks uncombed, and from the frozen beard, Long icicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard. Dryden.

The common droptone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ICINER. n. s. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

ICING. n. s. [from ice.] A covering of concreted sugar.

The splendid icing of an immense historick plumb-cake, was destroyed with a delicious bas-relief of the destruction of Troy. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 492.

ICICLE. n. s. In the north of England, an icicle. Grose.

Be she sure, or she be icicle,
Be she fire, or be she icicle.

Cotton, Days of Marriage, (1659).

ICON. n. s. [ikon, Gr.] A picture or representation.

Boyardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some of our own nation, and many Neuterlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Mackenzie on Providence.

ICONOCLAST. n. s. [iconoclaste, Fr.; ἰκονοκλάστης, Gr.] A breaker of images.

Pope Stephen, IV. in 769 condemned this council in a synod of Italian bishops, who asserted the honour of images against the eastern iconoclasts. Young on Idolatrous Corrupt, ii. 275.

ICONOCLASTICK. adj. [from iconoclast.] Breaking or destroying images.

I have sometimes reflected for what reason the Turks should appoint such marks [inches in their mosques] to direct their faces towards, in prayer. And if I may be allowed to conjecture, I believe they did it at first in testimony of their iconoclastic principle; and to express to them both the reality of the Divine presence there, and at the same time also its invisibility. Maunderell, Temp. p. 13.

Most of those [statues] at York were destroyed in the first emotions of iconoclastic zeal. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, l. 44.

ICONOGRAPHY. n. s. [ἰκονογραφία and ἰκονογράφω, Gr.; iconographie, Fr.] A description of pictures, statues, and similar monuments of ancient art.

ICONOLATER. n. s. [ἰκονολάτρης, Gr.; iconolâtre, Fr.] A worshipper of images; a name given by the iconoclasts to the Romanists.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons difference; as the icy plunging,
And churlish cliding of the winter's wind. Shakespeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Bayle.

Hear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt ice, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flocks grow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shakespeare, Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
He thou so too. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

ICY-PEARLED. adj. Studded with pearls, as it were of ice.

So mounting up in icy-pearled car,
Through middle empire of the freezing air,
He wander'd long. Miln. Death of a Fair Infant.

IDE. Contracted for I would.

IDEA. n. s. [idé, Fr.; ἰδέα, Gr.] Mental image.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Spenser.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thought, Fir'd. Keats.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobility of mind. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea. Milton, P. L.

If Chaucer, by the best idea wrought,
The fairest woman before his eyes be set. Dryd.

IDEAL. adj. [ideal, Fr. Colgrave.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; our real, when the senses, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, shewn in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Chrys. Phil. Prin.

TO IDEALIZE. v. n. [from ideal.] To form ideas.

Others attributed it [religion] to meditation and wonder on the beauty and magnificence of nature, or the forebodings of futurity congenial to man, or their natural propensity to idealize. Maly, Act. of Meuser's Hist. of All Relig. (1786).

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO IDEATE. v. a. [from idea.] To fancy; to form in idea.

Letters mingle souls;
For thus friends almost speak; this ears controule
The tediousness of my life; But for the sake
I could desire nothing which could please. Dante to Sir H. Wotton, Poems, p. 146.

What good statesmen would have by, who should ideate or fancy such a commonwealth? Scott, Clarissa, P. I., ch. 2. in Childs.

IDENITICAL. adj. [identique, Fr.] The IDENTICAL; same; implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The heard's a identick heard you know,
The same numerically true. Hudibras.

Their majus is identical with majis.

Those ridiculous identique propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tulstons, Serm.

If this pre-identique eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is so other than God. Healey, Serm.

IDESTICALLY. adv. [from identical.] With sameness.

In artificial things the introduction of a new form makes not the matter to be identically different from what it was. Ross on Sir K. Digby.

IDESTICANEAS. n. s. [from identical.] Sameness.

IDESTIFICATION. n. s. [from To identify.] Production of sameness; proof of identity.

Step. He may then be able, for ought we know to the contrary, to join the soul or spirit of man to himself.

Dick. Not so as to make but one person of both; such an identification I take to be impossible.

Step. You may take it to be so; but I am sure you cannot prove it.

Step. I am not ready to admit the identification of the Romish faith with Gospel faith.

Step. Watson, Charge.

To IDENTIFY.* v. a. [from identick, and the Lat. fin.]

1. To prove sameness.

All indictments must set forth the christian name, surname, and addition of the state and degree, mystery, town, or place, and the county of the offender: and all this to identify his person.

Blackstone.

2. To make the same: as, his cause is identified with mine.

All the divine perfections, being intrinsic unto and identified with the divine nature or essence.

Burrow, Works, i. 591.

IDENTITY. n. s. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty.

South, Sermon.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thence form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram.

Prior.

IDES. n. s. [Ides, Fr.; idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Roman calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July, and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

A noodle-war bids you beware the ides of March.

Shakespeare.

IDIOCRASY. n. s. [idiocrase, Fr.; Idoc and εἰδω, Gr.] Peculiarity of constitution.

IDIOCRITICAL. adj. [from idiocrasy.] Peculiar in constitution.

I stand not upon their idicy in thinking that horses did eat their lóts.

Bacon.

IDIOM. n. s. [idiome, Fr.; Idioma, Gr.] In Sylvester's Du Bart. 1621. p. 663, the word idoma is placed among English terms requiring explanation. A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romantic our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours.

Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach, And to just idioms fit our doubtful speech.

Prior.

IDIOMATICAL* } adj. [from idiom.] PE-

IDIOMATICK. } culiar to a tongue; phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanings by passing through the mouth of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idomatic ways of speaking.

Spectator.

Milton mistakes the idomatical use and meaning of "manducate."

Warren, Notes on Milton's Son. Poems.

IDIOPATHY. n. s. [idiopathie, Fr.; ἰδία and πάθος, Gr.]

1. A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quincy.

2. Peculiar affection or feeling.

Men are so full of their own fancies and idiosyncrasies, that they scarce have the civility to interchange any words with a stranger.

Merr., Song of the Soul, Pref. to P. li.

An elephant hath his idiosyncrasy, and a man his, at the hearing of a pipe: a cat, and an eagle, at the sight of the sun.

More, Song, &c. Notes, p. 429.

IDIOSYNCRASY. n. s. [idiosyncrasy, Fr.; ἰδία, σύν, and συναίρεσις, Gr.] A peculiar temper or disposition of body not common to another.

Whether quail, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do incessantly feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties.

Glanville, Biog.

IDIOΤ. n. s. [ιδίω, Fr.; idiota, Lat.; ἰδιώτης, Gr.] John. — The Greek word means originally a private person, and next an illiterate one. Durel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
A poor and idle sin. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, show money god, quoth he,
That all this idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use?

Servius, F. Q.
This answer is both idle in regard of us,
and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are in our estimation, idle reproaches, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo; how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smild scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
He wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversion. Rogers.

To IDLE† v. n. [from the adjective.]
1. To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

These did not hurt, were sober, but went idling about the grove with their hands in their pockets, and telling the number of the trees there. Swaley, Anecd. ii. 439.

Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

IDLENESS† n. s. [from idle. Sax. ibellece.]
Not very often found in the plural; at least not an instance occurs in Dr. Johnson's examples. Thomson uses it.]

1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.

Nor is excess the only thing by which sin breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South, Serm.

2. Absence of employment.

All which yet could not make us accuse her,
though it made us pine away for spirit, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Bidney.

He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In scripture exercis'd his happy skill.

Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness brings forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.

Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock.
Zech. ii. 17.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in unruly,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldier's god, and people's idol. Jenham, Soly.

IDOLATER* n. s. [Idolatre, Fr.; idololatra,
Lat.]

1. One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable:
first, in that which they worship they find no success; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is nothing to be looked for but the effects of more just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism.

2. Simply, an adorer; a great admirer.

Johnson was an idolater of the ancients. Hurd.

IDOLATRESS* n. s. [from idolater.] She

I to God have brought Disbonour, obloquy, and o'p'd the mouths Of idolists and seditious.

Milton, S. A.

To IDOLIZE, v. a. [from idol.] To worship idolatrously.

The reason Theodoret assigns for God's changing the diet of men from the fruits of the earth to the flesh of animals is that, foreknowing they would adore his creatures, he might aggravate the absurdity, and make it the more ridiculous to do so, by their consuming at their tables what they sacrificed to at their altars.

Biblioth. Bibl. t. 246.

2. To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just and wise, Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize.

Dehsm.

Parties, with the greatest violence of Christian unity, denigrate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first breacher of their idolatrie opinions.

Dehsm.

IDOLIZER.* n. s. [from idolize.] One who loves or reverences to adoration.

Overriding idolaters of the faculty of free will.

Morr, Myst. of God. (1663), p. 281.

The idolaters of monarchy, with equal flattery, have attributed the same prerogative to temporal princes.

Mansueto, Disc. (1681), p. 132.

Though I be not such an idolater of antiquity as Harris, yet they have great charms for me.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 38.

IDOLOUS.* adj. [from idol.] Idolatrous. Obsolete.

Was not this, think you, good wholesome counsel of this idolous bishop?

But knowing jealousy, out of their sight Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite.

Spenser, F. G.

How all the other passions led to air,

As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrac'd despair;

And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy!

O love, be moderate; stay thy dire-entree.

Why did you suffer Jealousy,

Slight thing of Italy,

To taint his noble heart and brain

With needless jealousy?

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Small jealousy, 'tis true, inflame desire

'Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire.

Dryden.

The jelly of her lips. Becon.
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the gelly.

The desert came on, and jellies brought. King.
That jelly's rich, this malmsy bealing;
Pray dip your whisks. Pope, Sat. of Horace.

JE'LLY-BAG. n. s. A bag through which gelly is distilled.

An epigram, if smart and good,
In all its circumstances shou'd
Be like a jelly-bag. Swift.

Make it at top both wide and fit,
To hold a budget-full of wit,
And point it at the end. Sturtevant, 1, 76. (1790).

JE'MMINES. n. s. [from jemmy.] Spruce-ness. A colloquial expression; not used in serious writing.

JE'MMY. adj. [perhaps from gimp; or from gimcrack, in the sense of a smart fellow. See GIMP, and GIMCRACK.] Spruce. A low word.

To this race of words I must refer your vulgar term jemmy; a jemmy fellow, &c. and our quaint though familiar phrase gim-crack.

JE'NNETING. n. s. [Corrupted from Junetting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

JE'NNET. n. s. [See GENET.] A Spanish horse.

The Spanish king presents a jenet. Prior.
To show his love.

To JE'OPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger.

Many one jeopardeth his best joint to maintain himself in sumptuous raiment. Hemling, B. II.

Reboulton and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death. Judges, v. 18.

He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 3 Mac.

JE'OPARDED. n. s. [from the verb.] One who puts to hazard. Sherwood.

JE'OPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

The jeopardous time is at hand. Bible on the Rev. sign, B. I. b.

Moved or solicited to some jeopardous course. Gataker, Spiritual Watch, p. 98.

JE'OPARDOUSLY. adv. [from jeopardous.] In danger; dangerously. Hulot.

JE'OPARDY. n. s. [This word is supposed to be derived from jai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner, Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — I had made the same remark as Mr. Bagehaw, and Mr. Malone, that this word is rather a corruption of jeu parti; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is properly a game in which the chances are exactly even. Hence it came to signify any thing uncertain or hazardous. See also Du Cange in V. Jocus PARTITUS.] Hazard; danger; peril.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you a recompence;
In this adventure's chancel jeopardy. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Why stand we in jeopardy every hour?
Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes: ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. 1 Cor. xv. 30.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Shakespeare, K. John.

To JERK. v. a. [jerpeccan, Sax. correcere. Lye and Dr. Johnson. — Hreckia, Icel. pulsare, or järke, pes feriens. Serenius.]

1. To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerke. Swift.

I lack inquiry
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've yerked him here under the ribs. Shakespeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

2. To throw a stone by hitting the arm against the side; contrasted with throwing, which is done with the arm at full length. A common, and probably an old, word among boys.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should be some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Consent the silly notions of steering buoyancy;
and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confidence fallacy. Glenville.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis: — neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden, Lett. to Sir R. Howard.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's hurt;
His jase gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Loobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they constantly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Green.

3. A throw; a cast; the act of jerking. [from the second meaning of the verb active.]

JER'KEN. n. s. [from jerke.] One who strikes with a quick smart blow; a whipper; a lasher. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JER'KIN. n. s. [cypselkin, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Dutch, jerk, a frock.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shakespeare.

Uticum we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool?

More, Antid. against Athens.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor fine jerkin, and tattered clauder, certainly he would have but small audience. South, Sermon.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a jerkin. Hutchinson.

I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Swift, Gulliver, Trav.

JER'KIN. n. s. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

This should be written gyrkin.

JER'KEY. n. s. [from the island of Jerkey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

She doth sit, and stockings knit
Of jerkey and of woolsen. Evans's Old Ballads, l. 179.

JERU'SALEM Artichoke. n. s. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small offsets, and by quartering the roots.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

JESS. n. s. [gect, French; getto, Italian.] A short strap of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hammer.

If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear bestirring,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare, Othello.

JES'AMINE. n. s. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly blossom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of clematis;
Her breast like lillies, are their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossoms of jeannettes. Spenser.

JESSE. n. s. A large bran candlestick, branched into many sconces, hanging down in the middle of a church or choir; so called from the similitude of the branches, at its invention, to those of the "arbor Jesse," the branch or genealogical tree of Jesse. Comel.

JESSED. adj. [from jess.] Having jesses on; an heraldic term.

To JEST. v. n. [gesticulator, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Goth. gys, iiriso, Serenius.]

1. To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Just not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Reuchlin, viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go no unreduced.
— You may jest on; but I do not like these several curious. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. To play a part in a mask. Obsolete.

As gentle and so jocund, so to jest,
Go I to fight. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

JEST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, masters of state, and great persons.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, 3 p. 2

because idle and profane wit can break jests upon them. Tilston.
He had turn'd it all tragedy to jest. Pross.
When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me? then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakespeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-see, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my earnest prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have been a king in earnest. Grew.

4. A mask. Obsolete.

He promisd us in honour of our guest,
To grace our banquet with some pompous jest. Kid, Span. Tragedy.

5. A jest or an action. See GIST.

The jests or acts of princes or captains. Th. T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 204.

JESTER. n. s. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wit;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now, as a jester, I accuse you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A jester, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the First.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many pleasures, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JESTING. n. s. [from jest.] Utterance

of sarcasms or jests.

Neither fidelity, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient. Elyot, v. 4.

JESTING-STOCK. n. s. A laughing-stock;

an object of derision.

An ape, quoth she, and jesting-stock
Is man to God in sky,
As oft as he doth trust his wit
Too much, presuming he.

Goody, Zodiake of Life, (1565), sign. Q. iii.

JESTINGLY. adv. [from jesting.] In jest;

with merriment.

If he be unmarried, and sojourn, he never talks with any woman alone, but in the audience of others, and that seldom, and then also in a serious manner, never jestingly or sportfully. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 9.

When his daughter-in-law [Sir Henry Spelman's] returned home from visiting her neighbours, he would always ask her what of antiquity she had heard or observed, and if she brought home no such account, he would chide her, jestingly. Ascham, Anecd. li. 541.

JESUIT. n. s. [Fr. Jesuite.] One of a religious and learned order, founded by Ignatius Loyola, a Spanish military man, in the sixteenth century; which presumed to take the name of the Society of Jesus. "This society having been erected on purpose to fight the pope's battles, not with prayers, and tears, and monastic addresses, but with learning, policy, and address; its members are not, by its constitution, bound to have a choir for the performance of divine offices, neither have they one any where: nor are they bound to attend processions; nor to use any of the monastic austerities, which would interrupt their studies, or might render their address less agreeable to all sorts of people; and for that reason the other orders will hardly allow the Jesuits to be monastics or religious." Dr. Geddes's Tracts, vol. iii. p. 434. edit. 1730. The word, in our language, has been applied to men of great cunning, craft, and deceit; whence the common word jesuitical.

They think it as unsafe to commit religion and liberty to their arbitrating as to a synagoge of Jesuits. Milton, Of Ref. in Reg. B. 2.

We justly reprobate the Jesuits, who have adapted all Christianity to temporal and political views, for maintaining a position so repugnant to the laws of nature, morality, and religion, that an evil may be committed for the sake of good, which may arise from it. Addison, Freeholder, No. 7.

JESUITED. adj. [from noun.] Conforming to the principles of the Jesuits.

Our *Jesuit*ed papists have a disease that holds them more like this of the beggar.

Dr. White, Serm. (1615), p. 29.
At Rome the pope's nuncio, and her *Jesuit*ed mother here. Milton, Elocut. 7.

JESUITES. n. s. A woman adopting the principles of the Jesuits.

These forward women usurp upon the fashions of their husbands, and will have their faces seen as well as their voices heard; as the Jesuites of late time dared both to attempt and practise, all the late restraint of pope Urban curbed and suppressed them. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

JESUITICAL. adj. [from jesuit.] Belonging to a Jesuit; denoting a Jesuit; and thence, in our language, equivocating, imposing upon.

The place is so full and clear, that all the miserable and strained evasions of the Jesuitical gain-sayers cannot elude it. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 276.

Though for fashion's sake called a parliament, yet by a Jesuitical sleight not acknowledged, though called so. Milton, Elocut. § 13.

The direction of our attention here is but a Jesuitical quibble. More, Antiq. against Idolatry, ch. 9.

Detecting those Jesuitical principles. Dryden.

JESUITICALLY. adv. [from jesuitical.]

Craftily.

This is full out as Jesuitically contrived, as the other was said and thought to be.

Echard, Observ. Ant. Cont. of the Cler. Prof.

JESUITISM. n. s. The principles and doctrine of the Jesuits.

Puritanism is — only reformed Jesuitism, as Jesuitism is nothing else but popish puritanism.

South, Serm. v. 219.

JET. n. s. [Sax. ægar; Saxon; get, Dutch;

engates, Lat. Formerly our word was coat, or jeat. So Barret and Fuller write it.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is con-founded with canal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
There is more difference betwixt fish and hers, than between jet and ivory.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a jet.

Of seed pearl, are she hath'd her there.
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set.
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet.

The neck slight shaded. Thomas, Summer.

2. [Jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next in adverse way!
For should 't' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Hudibras.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What arch'd norribbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet! Tusser, Husbandry.

4. Drift; scope. Get, or jet, was anciently used for fashion; as by Chaucer, and Hoccleve.

The true jet of the argument was to be drawn from precedent. Wyclif.

To Jet. v. n. [Jetter, Fr. jet, Icel. exire, trudeire; from the Su. Goth. æt, extrin, forat.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare.

The west end yields a right magnificent aspect, by reason of an eminency of land jetting out further than the rest.

Blount, Voyage to the Levant, (1650), p. 17.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait; to "jette lordly through the streets, that men may see them." Barret.

Another sort jetting up and down, to wayte when my lady shall be ready to see a coat of their office. Confut. of N. Shalton, (1546), sign. G. v.

Uncomely walking, and jetting up and down, and overthrowing the church. Hemling, B. ii.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes.

Shakespeare.
Amongst the chasteat dames doth jet 'n it now,
With homely stamp'd on 'hy haughty brow. Fanshew, Tr. of Past. Fido.

3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, Fr.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wicam.

JET-SAM. n. s. [Jetter, Fr.] Goods or

JET-SOM. n. s. [Jetter, Fr.] other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiralty. Bailey.

JETTER. n. s. [Fr. jettee, "a jettie or juttie, a bearing out or leaning over in buildings; also, the bank of a ditch, &c." Cotgrave. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this substantive in any shape. Shakespeare has jutty. See JUTTY. His elder, Skelton, humorously describes a person "jawed like a jetty." Poems, p. 124. And Cotgrave, we see, gives it jettie or juttie. Why the English form should of late have been abandoned for the French, no good reason can be assigned.]

1. A projection of part of any building. See JUTTY.

An out-buttin' or jettie of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house.

2. A kind of pier; a mole projected into the sea.

A curious harbour, formed by three stone jetties, carried out a good way into the sea. Smollett.

They found the demolition at Dunkirk entirely at a stand; instead of demolition, they found construction; for the French were then at work on the repair of the jetties.

Burke, (Obs. on the State of the Nat., 1769).
Some jetties and piers of defence, ill placed, had been made. Prof. to Swenson's Reports, (1797).

J'ETTER.* n. s. [from To jet.] A spruce fellow; or any struts.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

J'ETTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascare, are of a jetty black.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Her hair

Adown her shoulders loosely lay tresses'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd.

Pope.

Nigricina black, and Merdianite brown,

Vied for his love in jetty bowers below. Pope.

To J'ETTY.* v. n. [Fr. jetter.] To jut. See JETTER.

An out-buttin'—of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house.

Florio, Ital. Dict. (1598).

JEW.* n. s. [from Judah.] An Hebrew; an Israelite. "Since their return from the Babylonian captivity, they lost, in great measure, the name of Israelites, and were called Jews, from Judah, their principal tribe, which made up the chief of the captives in Babylon, and consequently of those who returned from thence." Collyer, Sacred Interp. vol. i. ch. 16.

The learned Chrysostome, in a sermon against the Jews, tells them this fact [the vain attempt to rebuild the temple] was then fresh in the memories even of their young men, that it happened but twenty years ago, and that it was attested by all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, where they might still see the marks of it in the rubbish of that work, from which the Jews desisted in so great a fright, and which even Julian had not the courage to carry on. This fact, which is in itself so miraculous, and so indubitable, brought over many of the Jews in Christianity; and shows us, that after our Saviour's prophecy against it, the temple could not be preserved from the plough passing over it, by all the care of Titus, who would vain have prevented its destruction, and that instead of being re-edified by Julian, all his endeavours towards it did but still more literally accomplish our Saviour's prediction, that not one stone should be left upon another. Addison on the Chr. Rel. § 8.

As rich as a Jew.* A proverbial phrase.

We are apt to say, in a proverbial way, as rich as a Jew; but the Jews, taken in general, are not a rich people. There have been always some few among them that were intensely wealthy, and it was from the observation of these few that the proverb arose. Pegge, Anonym. v. 20.

JE'WEL. n. s. [joyaux, Fr. jewelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture.

Shakespeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets, An empty casket, where the jewel, life,

By some damo'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world; a man putting all his pleasures into one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel.

South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels lost, stones, rich and precious stones, Sic's a by my daughter!

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Proud fame's imperial seat

With Jewels black'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

But farewell to your sisters.

— Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes

Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

JE'WEL-HOUSE, or Office, n. s. The place where the regal ornaments are deposited.

The king has made him master of the jewel-house.

To J'EWEL.* v. a. [from noun.] To dress or adorn with jewels.

You are as well jewell'd as any of them: your ruff and lienz about me is much more pure than theirs.

B. Jonson, Paster.

JE'WEL-LIKE.* adj. [jewel and like.] Brilliant as a jewel.

Her eyes as jewel-like.

And car'd as richly. Shakespeare, Pericles.

JEWELLER. n. s. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller.

Dryden.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JEW'ESS.* n. s. [from Jew.] An Hebrew woman.

Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess.

Acts, xxi. 34.

There will come a Christian by, Will be worth a Jewess' eye.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

JEW'ISH.* adj. Denoting a Jew; relating to the Jews.

Not giving heed to Jewish fables. Ty. i. 14.

It was customary with the Jews to be called by a Jewish name among their own countrymen, and by another among the Gentiles. Hence we find Thomas called Didymus, St. John, xi. 16; and Tabitha called Dorcas, Acts, ix. 36; and Saul had the Roman name of Paul.

Collyer, Sacred Interpreter.

JEW'ISHLY.* adv. [from Jewish.] In a Jewish manner.

And howe'er French kings most Christian be, Their crowns are circumsid'd most Jewishly.

Dryden, Parnassus, p. 86.

JEW'ISHNESS.* n. s. [from Jewish.] The religious rites of the Jews.

These faithless fondle new-fanglers would bring us again from the faith unto paganism, and unto the old Jewishness.

Martin, Mar. of Fr. (1554), sign. L. iii. b.

JEW'RY.* n. s.

1. Judah.

In Jewry is God known. Ps. lxxvi. 1.

2. A district inhabited by Jews; whence probably the street so called in London. The word is very old in this sense.

There was in Aule, in a great city, Amongest Christian folk a Jewery.

Chaucer, Prior. Tale.

JEW'S-EAR.† n. s. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — "The arbor Judas is thought to be that whereon Judas hanged himself, and not upon the elder tree as it is vulgarly said. Gerardus Herbal, edit. Johnson, p. 1428. I am clear that the mushrooms or excrescences of the elder tree, called auricula Jude in Latin, and commonly rendered Jew's ears, ought to be translated Judas' ears from the popular superstition above mentioned." Brand. Pop. Antiq. ii. 587. n.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup: from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill, Mat. Med.
An herb called Jew's ear grows upon the lower part of elms and sometimes ashes in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

JEW'S-HARP.† n. s. [The Jews-trump, or, as it is more generally pronounced, the Jew-trump, seems to take its name from the nation of the Jews, and is vulgarly believed to be one of their instruments of music. — But, upon enquiry, you will not find any such musical instrument as this described by the authors that treat of the Jewish music. In short, this instrument is a mere boy's play-thing, and incapable in itself of being joined either with a voice or any other instrument; and I conceive the present orthography to be a corruption of the French jeu-trump, a trumpet to play with, and in the Belgic, or Low-Dutch, from whence come many of our toys, a trum is a rattle for children. Sometimes they will call it a Jest-harp; and another etymon given of it is Jaw-harp, because the place where it is played upon is between the jaws! Pegge, Anonym. i. 82.] A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEW'S-MALLOW. n. s. [corchorus, Latin.]

Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW'S-STONE. n. s. An extraneous fossil, being the clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria.

Hill, Mat. Med.

JEW-TRUMP.* See JEW-HARP.

As playing on a gittern, or a jew-trump.
Brown, and Fl. Low. Progress.

JEZEBEL.* n. s. Formerly employed to denote a forward, imperinent woman; and perhaps not yet wholly disused.

You are to know, sir, that a jezabel (so called by the neighbourhood from displaying her pernicious charms at her window) has a thousand little tricks, and foibles, to attract the eyes of all the idle young fellows in the neighbourhood.

Spectator, No. 175.

Having myself observed a nest of jezabels near the Temple, who make it their diversion to draw up the eyes of young templars, that at the same time they may see them stumble in an unlucky gutter which runs under the window. Ibid.

J.F.† conjunction. [γ]; Saxon; the imperative of the Gothic gifan and Sax. giban, to give, to concede, to allow. Skinner and Ray have preceded, in this deduction at least from the Saxon. Mr. Horne Tooke; who, however, has abundantly illustrated it by examples from our ancient writers, who used gif and yef, where we now employ if as well as the verb give, the word that being generally understood or implied in the former case; and then the meaning being, "allow that," and then the thing be so," which senses we annex to give. God gif, God grant that; a very old expression. Yet it may not be omitted, that if has existed in the Gothic language without the deduction named by Mr. Tooke, or the possibility of such deduction, as noticed by Dr. Jamieson under the Scottish gif. The old word is gau, and jabai; to the former the Sax. zu, if, corresponds. These have no connection with the word give. Mr. Tooke should have shewn why there was none. The Icelandic if is also the hypothetical particle; which, as well as the Gothic conjunctions, Serenus, and Ihre connect with the Su. Goth. jeif, doubt, exception. I shall not say with Mr. Callender, that "to derive if from gif, as some writers have done, is ridiculous;" yet I would not overpass the pretensions of if as a radical word.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs, or ands.
Hooker.

If that rebellion came like kisel, in base and subject routs; I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd In my true, native, and most proper shape, You, reverend father, and these noble lords, Had not been here. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord — If 't' talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.

Thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath, if that thou hearken unto the commandment of the Lord thy God. Deut. xxviii. 14.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maintains to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Triumph, that he'll have heard my pray'r, Ausid. if (Cicilius) deserve thy care. Pope, Statius.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance; Dryden.

But by this easy rise they all advance. She doubts if two and two make four: It can't — it may be — and it must;

To which of these must Alma trust? Priser.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

4. Though. Not usual.

They themselves deceived Their own revolt, not I; if I foreknew, Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault. Milton, P. L.

I'FAITH.* adv. (an abbreviation of in faith.) Indeed; truly. See the adverb FAITH.

I'faith, I'll not nothing; I thank you as much as though I did. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Then I foughe it away i'faith. D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

IGNARO.* n. s. [Latin.] A contemptuous term of elder days for a block-head.

It was intolerable insolence in such ignarous to challenge this for popery, which they understood not. Moutings, App. to Cos. (1625.) p. 296.

No man can be such an ignaro, as to imagine his sinews to be made of wire, or his body to be immersed in brass. Henry, Sermon. (1658.) p. 96.

IGNOROUS. adj. [ignis, Lat.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanville, Scorpia.

TO IGNIFY.* v. a. [ignis and fic, Lat.] To form into fire.

The ignified part of matter was formed into the body of the sun. Staley, Palmeto. Sacra. p. 300.

IGNIVOLUOUS.* adj. [ignifluus, Lat.] Flowing with fire. Cockam.

IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Lat.] Presiding over fire.

Vulcan is call'd the power ignipotens. Pope, Homer.

IGNISFATUUS.† n. s. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from purified waters are usually called ignis fatui. Newton, Opticks.

An ignis fatuus, that bewitches And leads men into pools and ditches. Hudson, 1. 1.

Scared and guided by the ignis fatuus of popular superstition. D. Taylor, Arif. Handsom. p. 32.

TO IGNITE.* v. a. [from ignis, fire, Lat.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chemical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Gore, Muscum.

The ignited particles stream to dip themselves in the neighbouring stream.

See H. Shere, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 10.

Plato, in his Timæus, enumerating the ignited juices, names wine in the first place. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 212.

TO IGNITE.* v. n. To become red hot. A term of chymistry.

IGNITION. n. s. [ignition, Fr. from ignis.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled wire, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Bayle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITABLE. adj. [from ignis.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur ignitable parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IGNIVOMUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanus and ignivomus mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derrham, Physico-Theol.

IGNOBILITY.* n. s. [Lat. ignobilitas.] Want of magnanimity.

To locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectionately seeketh it to the glory of God, is a property belonging only to the hypocritical Pharisees and false lawyers. A more sign of ignobility can not be shown, than to hyde such noble monuments. Bald, in Leland's Nine Year's Gift.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignobis, Fr. ignobilis, Lat.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise the ignoble crowd, Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble idle doth want her proper limbs; Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

IGNOBLENESS.* n. s. [from ignoble.] Want of dignity; want of splendour; as, "ignobleness of birth." Ainsworth.

IGNOBLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God, Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame Ignobly! Milton.

Here, over-matched in flight; in heaps they lie; There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden, Æn.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [ignominiosus, Fr. ignominiosus, Lat.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpris'd, Fled ignominious. Milton, P. L.

Cethagus, through a traitor to the state, And torus'd, scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryden, Juc.

They gave, and she transfers'd the cure's advice, That monarchs should their inward soul disguise

By ignominious arts for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Boyle.
IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some ally to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.
IGNOMINY. n. s. [ignominia, Fr. ignominia, Lat.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour. Strength from truth divided, and from just, illaudable, though merits but disguise. And ignominy, yet to glory aspire, Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame.

Milton, P. L.
Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNOMY. n. s. This barbarous abbreviation of ignominy occurs very often in our old authors; and is not merely a poetical licence.

Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave! Shakespeare, A. Hen. IV. P. I.
Sprinkling the terms of honour wholly on the one part, and of hatred and ignominy on the other. St. E. Sandys, State of Religion.
They are paid in their own coin; or they are with ignominy repaid. Sp. Richardson on the Old Test. p. 286.

IGNORAMUS. † n. s. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and public; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective or too weak to make good the presentment; the effect of which word so written is, that all further inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without further answer. Covel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain un instructed pretender. A low word, Dr. Johnson says.—South uses it with good effect, and probably adopted it from the character of Ignoramus in the facetious Latin comedy of that name, first printed in 1680, the keen and admirable satire in which is exactly suitable to South's turn of mind.

If ever you find an ignoramus in place and power, and can have so little conscience and so much confidence as to tell him to his face, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world beside;—I dare undertake, that, as fulsome as you give him, he shall readily take it down, and admit the commendation, though he cannot believe the thing! South, Ser. i. 335.

As if, forsooth, there could not be so much as a few houses fired, a few ships taken, or any other calamitous accident befall this little corner of the world, but that some apocryphical ignoramus must presently find and pick it out of some abused, martyred prophecy of Ezekiel, Daniel, or the Revelation. South, Ser. v. 57.

IGNORANCE. n. s. [ignorance, Fr. ignoratio, Lat.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness. If all the clergy were as learned as themselves, are that the complicity of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n's. Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation Shakespeare.

That won you without blows!
If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise. Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.
It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law. Shirlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. Com. Pray.
I punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, Fr. ignorans, Lat.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Ps. lxxiii.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare, Coriol.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Ylston.

Fools grant what'er ambition craves,
And men once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know ought, which does behave my knowledge
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not In ignorant concealment. Shaks. Wind. Tole.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon, Ess.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I Lived ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton, P. L.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.

His shipping,
Poor ignorant babies, on our terrible coast
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANT. † n. s. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.

Let this cross carry what price it will
With noble ignorance. B. Jonson, Forest.
Look into the private closets of their devout ignorants, what difference shall you find between the image and the suppliant? Sp. Hall, Quo vadis.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorant to preach. Dewham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskillfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

TO IGNORE. v. a. [ignorere, Fr. ignoro, Lat.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavored to introduce; but it has not been received, Dr. Johnson says. Boyle, however, is guiltless of the introduction; for the word occurs in our lexicography long before Boyle wrote. Thus Cotgrave renders the Fr. ignorer "to ignore;" and so Shetwood defines ignore "to be ignorant of." But it is a word not worthy to be used.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts by me alleged. Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Lat.] Capable of pardon. Dict.

IGNOTUS. adj. [Lat. ignotus.] Unknown. Like ignore, a very pedantic word, and not to be received.

A traveller passing through the confines of ignote countries.

St. M. Sandys, Ess. (1684.) p. 1.

Shall such very quaint and contemptible pretenders be allowed a place among the most renowned of poetical writers?

Philips, Theatr. Poet. (1675.) Pref.

JIB. n. s. [In naval language.] The foremost sail of a ship.

TO JIB. v. a. To shift a boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other.

TO JIBE. See TO GIBE.

JICAKJOO. n. s. [a cant word, from jog; sometimes pronounced jig jog.] A shake; a push.

An some writer (that I know) had had but the penning of this matter, he would ha' made you such a jerk-jig 't the booth, you should ha' thought an earthquake had been 't the Fair.

B. Jonson, Barth. Fair, Induct.

JIFFY. n. s. [Now a colloquial word in several parts of England; and sometimes used in ludicrous writing. It is also a Scotch expression, and Dr. Jamieson considers it as a corruption of gliff.]

An instant; a moment.

And then shall each Paddy, who once on the

Liffy

Preachance held the helm of some mackerel boy,

Hold the reins of the state, and dispense in a jiffy

More fishes than ever he caught when a boy!

Rejected Addresses.

JIG. n. s. [giga, Italian; geige, Teut. gige, Dan. and gigia, Icel. a fiddle; and the old Fr. gige, or gigue, a sorte d'instrument de musique a vent.] Roquefort.

Chaucer uses giggies in the sense of "irregular sounds produced by the wind." Tyrwhitt.

The French instrument, borrowed from the northern, is considered by Menage as a sort of fiddle; whence the application of the word to the tune or dance.]

1. A light carelessness, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former ferrency.

Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Dunce.
All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dances, Milton, Comus.
The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting.

Fenton.
They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbutnot.
Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in thy jigs, and dances in thy chains. Pope.
2. A ludicrous composition; a ballad; a song. Obsolete.
Potterly shall know that you date, in those Jig-given times, to countenance a legitimate poet.
B. Jonson.

A worthy story, howsoever writ,
For language, modest mirth, conceits, or wit,
Meets oftentimes with the sweet commendation
Of "lang's, 'tis scurvy!" when for approbation
Prais'd will be clapp'd at, and every time
Prais'd and applauded by a clamorous chime.

Beaumont and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn, Prolog.
To JIG.† v. n. [from the noun. Old Fr.
jiguer.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

With earnest endeavour pushed forward to gaming, jiggling, wassailing, and mixed dancing.
Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
As for the jiggling part and figures of dances,
I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER.† n. s. [jig and maker.] One who dances or plays merrily; or who writes songs and ballads.
Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

JIGGER.† n. s. [from jig.]
1. One that jigs. Ash.
2. In naval language, a machine to hold on the cable, when it is heaved into the ship by the revolution of the windlass.

Chambers.
JIGGISH.† adj. [from jig.] Disposed or suitable to a jig.
She is never sad, and yet not jiggish.

Hickington's Cantos, vign. A. 8.
This man makes on the violin a certain jiggish noise to which I dance. Spectator, No. 276.

A kit is more jiggish than the fiddle itself, and never sounds but to a dance. Tatler, No. 157.
JIGGISH. n. s. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knock-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He ridled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jig-cum-bobs. Hudibras.
JILL.† n. s. This is the old form of writing gill, a contemptuous name for a woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.
Be merry, but with modesty,
Lest some man blame thy honesty;
Let manners think be pleasant still;
With Jacks yet do not play the Jill.

Kendal, Flowers of Epigrams, (1577.)
JILL-FLIRT.† n. s. A giddy, light, or wanton woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.

We are infected with a parcel of jillivies, who are not capable of being mothers of brave men;
for the infant parakeets of the temper and disposition of its mother. Goldsmith, No. 26.

JILT.† n. s. [gilia, Icelandic, to entrap in an amuse. Lyc. Perhaps from rigilo, by contraction; or gillit, or gillid, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland. Dr. Johnson.—It may be from the Sax. gegil, yal, wanton. See the sixth sense of GILL. For, in the use of gill or jill by our old authors, it is evident, that the word first signified a loose or wanton woman; whence its softened application to her who cheats her lover.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt;
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Owen, Dryden.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.
When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilted rill'd the state, and statesmen farces writ.

Pope.
To JILT.† v. a. [from the noun.] To trick
a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves you;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden, Juv.
Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted;
bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

To JILT.† v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceit.

She might have leav'd d'it to cuckold, jilt, and sham.
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

JIMMERS.† n. s. Jointed hinges. Bailey.
A northern word. Grose. See GIMMER.
The things of this world hang together by very weak and slender jimmiers.
Letter of Dr. Hen. More, 1680, 1681, &c. of Dr.
More by Ward, p. 156.

JIMMY.† See JEMMY.
JIMP.† adj. Neat; handsome; elegant of shape. See GIMP. Used in Scotland, and in the north of England; and sometimes pronounced jim.

To JINGLE.† v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed. Dr. Johnson.
—It is the same as to gingle, where see the etymology.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakespeare.

Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd. Shakespeare, Tempest.
You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appeal Smith.

What crowds of these, impatiently told,
In sounds and jingling syllables grow apt! Pope.
To JINGLE.† v. a. To shake so that a shrill noise may be made.

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew.

Pope.
JINGLE.† n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.

2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.
3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.
If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly.

JIPPO.† n. s. [Fr. juppe.] A waistcoat;
a jacket; a kind of stays worn by ladies.
This unnoticed word is near enough to the parent French, which has long been absurdly converted into jump. See the third sense of JUMP.

There [is] a most insolence under a frieze
jerk in as velvet jippo. Jura Cler. &c. (1661), p. 14.
Over all this they were a jippo, not unlike the jippo's worn by the French ladies.

Hist. Description of the Kingdom of Muscovy, (1701), p. 80.
ILL. n. s. [corrupted from aide, Fr.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aide.

Upward the columns shoot, the roof ascend,
And arches wider, and long ere extend. Pope.

ILL. n. s. [aide, Fr.] An ear of corn.
Asinworth.

ILL. U. S. n. s. [Lat.]
An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is really either a circum-volution, or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot.

ILLEX. n. s. [Lat.]

The illex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as [it was] painted. Mortimer.

ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Lat.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

ILIAC Passion. A kind of nervous colic, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvō, to roll.

Those, who die of the iliac passion, have their bellies much swelled. Flyger on the Humours.

ILL.† adj. [elc, Saxon.] This word is still retained in Scotland, and the north of England; and denotes each; as ill
ane of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as, Mackintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Mackintosh of Mackintosh.

Shenbrot, should it not yphen
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful voice
Of Rosalind, (who knows not Rosalind?)
That Colin made? ill can I you rehearse.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

ILL.† adj. [contracted from evil, and retaining all its senses. Dr. Johnson.—
Icel. illr; Sneht. (Kon. Styr.) illr, malus, perversus. Vox antiquissima. Serenius.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL. Ill is but rarely applied to the person.

There's some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, till the Heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.

Shakespeare, First. Tule.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Neither is it ill for only that maketh an ill seat;
but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours.

Bacon, Ess.
Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline
the company to be sad and ill-disposed; others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.

Bacon.

He was saying to himself, that he was a very ill man to go on in visiting and professing love to Flavia; when his heart was embroiled to another.

Spectator, No. 398.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. The Teut. evil often denotes disease. See Kilian in V. EVELL. This sense of ill is to be referred to ail, which is the Goth. agilo, tribulation; Sax. adil, disease.

You wish me health in very happy season; For I am on the sudden something ill.

Shakespeare, Hon. IV.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governors falling ill in the time of the sieges.

Temple.

ILL. n. s.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Descartes.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone; But are compell'd to avertice alone. For then in virtue's shape they follow vice.

Dryden, Jun.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still, Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all miseries ill escape, Is but a brute at best in human shape. Trotz, Jun.

Though plung'd in ill and exercis'd in care, Yet never let the noble mind despair; When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes, The gods their timely succour interpose; And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,

By unseasonable expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect. Ill at ease, both sea and all her train The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain.

Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty. Thou desir'st The punishment all on thyself! alas! Bear thine own first, ill, able to sustain His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part, And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton.

Ill bears the sea a youthful lover's fate, When just approaching to the nuptial state.

Dryden.

ILL. substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

Johnson.

When the substantive is compounded, the compound word mostly wants explanation; because the two words, when separated, seldom retain the same meaning, which they have when joined. But this is not the case with compounds of the adverb; they only require explanation, when the sense happens to be altered by the composition. Mason.

ILL. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul; Methinks I see thee, now thou art below; As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

No look, no last adieu, before we went! In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent.

Dryden, En.

I know The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound.

Philips.

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift, Kamnier.

Your ill meaning politician lords, Under pretence of bridal friends and guests, Appointed to await me thirty spies, Who, threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride

To writing from me and tell to them my secret. Milton, S. A.

A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand, To bribe whose vigilance, Egeus told A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

ILL. adverb.

There sounded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd. xviii. 10.

My colleague, Being to ill affected with the gout, Will not be able to be there in person. B. Jonson, Cotiline.

The examples Of every minute's instance, present now, Have put us in these ill beseeching arms. Shakespeare.

Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient ills: I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift Of Vertigern, or Hengist's ill bought land. Dryden.

We simple toasters take delight To see our women's teeth look white; And every saucy ill bred fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.

The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Shakespeare.

Easy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexion'd? It prays upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Cotter.

There grows, In my most ill compos'd affection such A stanching aversion, that were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To what end this ill concerted life, Palpable and gross? Dryden, Den. Sebastian.

Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.

The second daughter was a peevish, forward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

No Persian arms hides his homely walls With antick vents, which, through their shady fold, Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden, Ving.

You shall not find me, daughter, After the slander of most step-mothers, Ill eyed unto you. Shakespeare, Cymb.

I see thy sister's tears, Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death, In the pursuit of our ill fated love. Addison, Cato.

Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a false lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sedley.

New to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unkindly errand. Sedley.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed. And you sped, sir? Very ill favourably. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.

The fabrick dragon never guarded more The golden fleece, than he has ill got store. Dryden, Jun.

Bid him employ his care for his steady friends, And make good use of his ill gotten power, By shelling 'em much better than himself. Addison, Cato.

Ill ring'd passions in a prince's breast, Hazard his private and the publick rest. Waller.

That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden, DeFrenno.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away; What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walt.

Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born, First from the ancient world these giants came. Addison, P. L.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged amperity. Garth, Orid.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Esrange.

The match had been so ill made for Pleasure, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come filly to his defence. Sedley.

These are the product Of those ill trusted natures, which we see, Where good with bad were match'd. Milton, P. L.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin, Dispirited with frequent overthrows, Already wavering on their ill man's walls. Dryden.

He will not bear you out, for Pleasure, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come filly to his defence. Sedley.

Was ever criminal bold to plead? Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avacious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the mearest cottager, in any bargain for tithes. Swift.

Soon as th' ill women's rumour reach'd his ear, Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with ill ordered choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene, Down the ill organ's engines fall, Off fly the virgins. Swift.

For *Ill*is fix'd is my return; Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn, Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.

There motley images her fancy strike, Figures ill pair'd and fancied. Pope.

Sparta lost not to boast of such a woman; Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished poison. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray Her thoughts intentive on the bridal day. Pope, Odyssey.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.

The god inform'd This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sort'd; while pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Swift.

Ill spirited War was did we not send great Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakespeare.

From thy foolish heart, vain mad, I see An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting passion must I try? To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free; Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope, Odyssey.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief.

For death unfinish'd and ill tim'd relief,
Stood slow to her suit.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated?

That boldness and spirit which led us amongst their playfellow as school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned.

To ILL. * v. a. To reproach. A northern word. Grose. It is also used in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Supplement in voce.

IL, before words beginning with I, stands for in.

ILLA'CERABLE. * adj. [illacerabilis, Lat.] That cannot be torn.

ILLA'CRIMABLE. adj. [illacrimabilis, Lat.] Incapable of weeping.

ILLA'PSE.† n. s. [illapsum, Lat.]

1. Gradual omission or entrance of one thing into another.

What ravishing transports now
Scize on that intellect! how doth it glow
With fresh illapses of the purest light.

J. Hall on the Death of Ld. Hastings, Lac. Mus. (1650.)

The prophetic illapse could never grace an impure soul. Apocryph. on Vulg. Prop. (1665), p. 40. As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the illapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold invasion in this illapse
Of accident disaster.

Passion's fierce illapse
Rouses the mind's whole fabric.

Atteridge, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

To ILLA'QUEATE.† v. a. [illaqueo, Lat.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

Cockeram.

I am illaqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion.

They, that take upon them to be the only solvers from sin, are themselves held fast in the snares of eternal death; and do as necessarily illaqueate all others therein whom they proselyte to their religion. Mor. Acad. against Idolatry, Pref.

ILLA'QUEATION.† n. s. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation.

They wholly gave themselves up to learn to wrangle, and arts of illaqueation.

Religio by J. Nicholson, Mor. Ep. Corr. i. 140.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another; a noose.

ILLA'TION.† n. s. [illatio, Lat.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Which might be inferred by those, that were rather apt to make evil than good divisions of our proceeding. Brown, Rep. in the H. of Com. 5. Dec.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together.

ILLATIVE.† adj. [illatus, Lat.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

There is a great deal of difference between a mere illative necessity, which consists only in the logical consequence of one thing upon another, and between a causal necessity, which efficiently and antecedently determines and puts the faculty upon working.

In common discourse or writing such causal particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and therefore.

ILLATIVE. * n. s. That which denotes illation or conclusion.

This (word) pro that leads the text in, is both a relative, and an illative; referring to what he had said in the foregoing words; and inferring a necessary consequence of the one clause upon the other: "Purge out the old leaven: pro Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us."

Ep. Holt, Rem. p. 186.

ILLATIVELY. * adv. [from illative.] By illation or conclusion.

Most commonly taken illatively.

Ep. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 454.

ILLA'UDABLE.† adj. [illaudabilis, Lat.] Unworthy of praise or commendation.

This word is not coined by Milton; for it exists in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar, more than half a century before the Publication of Paradise Lost.

Strength from truth divided and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but disparage.

Milton, P. L.

You, my lord, have, I fear, been awed into a restraint of your genius in that point, by that ill-understood, (or otherwise) ill-grounded, and ill-audable maxim of Mr. Pope.

"For fools admire, but men of sense approve."

Delany, Observ. on Ld. Orrey, p. 109.

ILLA'UDABLY. adv. [from illaudable.] Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not accurately, too favourable a judgement of their own country.

ILLICEROUS. * adj. [illiceratus, Lat.] Full of allurement. Not in use.

Not the illicerous delectations of Venus, but the valiant acts and noble affairs of princes.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 19.

The study is elegant, and the matter illicerous, that is to say, sweet to the reader.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 190 b.

ILL'E'GAL. adj. [in and legalis, Lat.] Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself.

Swift.

ILL'E'GALITY.† n. s. [old Fr. illégalité.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings by virtue of them.

Clarendon.

By the restoration from the captivity, down to the days of our Saviour, the priests were notoriously generals, soldiers, judges, statesmen, and chief ministers of state; and even kings; without any reproof or mark of illegality taken notice of by our Saviour, or his Apostles; just as they might be teachers in the synagogues, and doctors of the law. But they enjoyed none of these posts in right of their priesthood; they were only allowed to them as to any other qualified Jew.

Ep. Story on the Priesthood, p. 33.

To ILL'E'GALIZE. * v. a. [in and legalize.] To render illegal.

ILL'E'GALLY.† adv. [from illegal.] In a manner contrary to law.

Matches illegally struck up, contrary to the pre-tended conditions.

Ep. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 9.

ILL'E'GALNESS. * n. s. [from illegal.] The state of being illegal.

ILL'E'GIBLITY. * n. s. [from illegible.] Incapability of being read.

ILL'E'GIBLE. adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Lat.] That cannot be read.

The secretary poured the ink-box all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible.

Hovell.

ILL'E'GIBLY. * adv. [from illegible.] In a manner not to be read.

ILL'E'GITIMACY. n. s. [from illegitimate.] State of bastardy.

ILL'E'GITIMATE.† adj. [in and legitimus, Lat.]

1. Unlawfully begotten; not begotten in wedlock.

Graves not at your state; For all the world is illegitimate.

Clarendon.

Being illegitimate, I was deprived of that endearing tenderness and uncommon satisfaction, which a good man finds in the love and conversation of a parent.

2. Not genuine. See the second sense of ILLEGITIMATION. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

To ILLEGITIMATE. * v. a. [from the adjective.] To render illegitimate; to prove a person illegitimate.

The cardinal, his uncle, would first have illegitimated him.

Sir H. Watson to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 479.

You will be the instruments of giving being to illegitimate issue, who are born to shame and contempt.

Ep. Burnet, Sermon. p. 593.

Born with a legal claim to honour and to affluence, he was in two months illegitimated by the parliament.

Adams, Life of Sumner.

ILLEGITIMATION.† n. s. [from illegitimate.] Not begotten in wedlock.

ILLEGITIMATION.† n. s. [from illegitimate.]

1. The state of one not begotten in wedlock.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of his hatred to both his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretence, the one of attainer, the other of illegitimation.

Bacon.

2. Want of genuineness.

Many such like pieces, which, neither in their sense nor idiom agreeable with the times they pretended to, do bear in their very fronts the apparent brands of illegitimation.

Dorn Martin, Lat. (1663), p. 57.

ILL'E'VABLE. adv. [lever, Fr.] That cannot be levied or exacted.

He rectified the method of collecting his revenue, and removed obsolete and illeivable parts of charge.

Hale.

ILL'E'CED. * adj. Having an ordinary or ugly face.

Then can be term his dirty ill'ced bride Lady, and queen, and virgin defiled!

Ep. Hall, Sat. i. 7.

ILL'E'VOURED. adj. Deformed.

O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults
Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Shakespeare.

ILL'E'VOUREDLY.† adv.

1. With deformity.

Make them look so rascally and ill-favourably, as might well become such wearers.

Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

Death doth play the fool with them;

Shewing his teeth, laughing at them;

Darcey, Wit's Pilgrim, Sign. P. 4.

A practice, which, duly seen is, and stripped of its hypocritical blinds, could not but look very odiously and ill-favourably. South, Serm. ii. 153.
2. Roughly; ruggedly; in ludicrous language.

He shook him very ill-favourably for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all whosoever he came. Howell.

ILLFAVOUREDNESS.† n. s. Deformity. The cheeks and the neck—might grace and beautify the ill-favourableness of the rest. Harmer, Trans. of Ben's Serm. (1587) p. 176.

ILLIBERAL.† adj. [illiberalis, Lat.]

1. Not noble; not ingenious. The charity of most men is grown so cold, and their religion so illiberal. King Charles.

2. Not munificent; not generous; sparing. Yet sobriety did, and well too: an argument that earth did not deal out their nourishment with an over-sparring or illiberal hand. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Mean; homely.

There is no such neither liberal nor illiberal, but it cometh from God, and leadeth to God. Fotherby, Atheism. (1629) p. 172.

ILLIBERALITY. n. s. [illiberalitas, Lat. from illiberal.]

1. Meanness of mind.

2. Parsimony; niggardliness; want of munificence. The liberality of parents, in allowance towards their children, is an harmful error, and acquaints them with shifts. Bacon.

ILLIBERALLY. adv. [from illiberal.] Disingenuously; meanly.

One that had been bountiful only upon surprise and incertainty, illiberally retracts. Deasy of Privy.

ILLICIT. adj. [illicitus, Lat. illicite, Fr.] Unlawful; as, an illicit trade.

ILLICITLY.† adv. [from illicit.] Unlawfully.

ILLICITNESS.† n. s. [from illicit.] Unlawfulness.

ILLICITIOUS.† adj. [illicitus, Lat.] Unlawful. This is the old adjective, and is found in Cotgrave and Sherwood. Illicit is modern.

TO ILLIGHTEN.† v. a. [in and lighten.] To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Raleigh, Dr. Johnson says. This is not the case. It appears to have been common.

Corporal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor diaphanous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illighted. Blackley.

This tale comes to Chrysostome by a third person, not by the illighted saint himself.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 78. To illighten every one that cometh into it, [the world.]

Cotaker, God's Eye upon Israel, (1645), Pref. Illighted saints see a greater lustre in knowledge than in the fine gold.

By Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 37.

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limit, Lat.] That cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the subtiler heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idolatry direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown.

With what an awful world-revolving power Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along The illimitable void! Thomson, Summer.

ILLIMITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITATION.† n. s. [from illimited.] What admits of no certain determination.

The illimitation of age, and the miseries that attend it. Ilp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, of Old Age, &c. l.

ILLIMITED.† adj. [in and limit, Latin, illimité, Fr.] Unbounded; interminable. They saw his power illimited and irresistible.

Ilp. Hall, Centenary, B. 4. In the former parts, the omnipotence of a Christian suffered no restraint; it was illimited, unconfin'd. Holcs, Rev. p. 126.

Neither doth the use or exercise of this dominion depend upon any one, so as to receive any direction or regulation, or to render any account of the administration of it; as being illimited, absolute, and supreme; and so the fountain from whence all dominion in any other is derived.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1. ILLIMITEDNESS. n. s. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon.

ILLITERACY.† n. s. [from illiterate.] Want of learning.

As I believe that what I have mentioned gave rise to the opinion of Shakespeare's want of learning; so what has continued it down to us may have been the many blunders and illiteracies of the first publishers of his works. Pope, Pref. to Shaks.

The deplorable condition of illiteracy and illiteracy. Warton, Hist. R. B. p. 452.

ILLITERAL.† adj. [in and literal.] Not literal.

Descending under the earth, is a translation most of all unexact and illiteral. Dr. Deussen, Texts on the Logos, &c. 1765, p. 251.

ILLITERATE.† adj. [illiteratus, Lat.] 1. Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science: applied to persons.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of caprice. Walton.

The illiterate writer, empiric like, applies To minds diseases' unsafe chance remedies: The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began.

Studied with care th' anatomy of man; Seen virtue, vice, and passions in their cause, And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first age of Christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate, embraced torments and death. Tillotson.

2. Unlearned; rude; barbarous; applied to things.

There are in many places heresy, and blasphemy, and impertinency, and illiterate rudenesses. Ilp. Taylor on Extremepore Prayer.

ILLITERATENESS. n. s. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with Christianity but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impurities of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Bayle.

ILLITERATURE.† n. s. [in and literature.] Want of learning.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion.

They, who in their present illiterature were so prone to sedition,—would be much more so if heated by bookish speculations. Addison, West Barbary, (1671), Pref.

If the historian intended hereby to arraign the abjects of illiterature. H. Warton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, p. 63.

ILL-LIVED.† adj. [ill and live.] Leading a wicked life.

How too like is this cracked bell to a scandalous and ill-lived teacher! His calling is honourable, his noise is heard far enough; but the flaw, which is noted in his life, mars his doctrine, and offends those ears which else would take pleasure in his teaching. Ilp. Hall, Ocean, Medit. § 56.

ILLNATURE. n. s. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility to any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED.† adj. [from illnature.] 1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominated a person ill-natured, they being such as make him grivous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Say, silly bird, th' ill-nature'd task refuse; Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison, Ovid.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase, Rich foreign mold on their illnature'd land induce. Philips.

ILLNATUREDLY. adv. [from illnatured.] In a peevish, froward manner.

ILLNESS. n. s. [from ill.] 1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health. On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent faction, during her late visit at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness. Thus would be great; Art not without animality; but without The illness should attend it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.] 1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of his dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderson so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Wallis.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason. Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Deasy of Privy.

ILLOGICALLY.† adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

The arguments, which bear hardest upon Socinus, are such as are taken from those Scriptures, which, beyond all possibility of rational contradiction, declare the pre-existence and pre-eminence of Christ, such as John, viii. 58. "O Father, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was 'I' which all the Socinians in the world could never yet give any clear, proper, and natural exposition of; but unaccountably and illogically pervert and distort them, in defiance of sense, and reason, and all the received ways of interpretation.

South, Serm. iii. 259.

ILLU'GICALNESS. * n. s. [from illigal.] Contrariety to the rules of reason.

The illigalness of the inference.

Hemmings, Works, iv. 546.

ILL-STARRED. * adj. [ill and star.] Influenced by evil stars with respect to fortune; unlucky.

O, ill-star'd lover! what avails it me

To love thy love? 'thave mine, what boots it thee?

Fincham, Tr. of Pastor Fido.

Ill-star'd birds, that listening, not admiring!

Shenstone, Eleg. 6.

To ILLU'DE † v. a. [illuder, Fr. illudo, Lat.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes allwary, sometimes he strook him struth, And falsed oft his blow, 't illude him with such bait.

Spenser, F. Q.

If the solitariness of these rocks do not illude me

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 1.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere, While its circumference, seeming to be brought Er's into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought.

Prior.

To ILLU'ME v. a. [illumine, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When you same star, that's westward from the pole

Had made his course, 't illume that part of heav'n,

Where now it burns. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow,

Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach betokens. Thomson, Summer.

To ILLU'MINATE v. a. [illumine, Fr. lumen, Lat.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do those vouchsafes, with thy love-kindling light,

To illumine my dim and dull'd eye. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light.

Watson.

He made the stars,

And set them in the firmament of heaven,

To illuminate the earth and rule the night.

Milton, P. L.

Reason our guide, what can she more reply

Than that the sun illuminates the sky;

Than that night rises from his absent ray;

And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated with his impostures. Sandys, Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural.

Locke.

1. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

2. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts.

ILLU'MINATE. * adj. [from the verb.] Enlightened.

That famous and truly illuminate doctor, Francis

Junius, the glory of Leyden.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 7.

A precise, pure, illuminate brother!

B. Johnson, Enr.

He hath an understanding so illuminate, as he is like to prove the best scholar of all his brethren.

Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 96.

ILLU'MINATE. * n. s. One pretending to be enlightened with superior knowledge;

as certain heretics of the sixteenth century, called illuminati, affected to be;

and as other fanciful persons, the her-metical philosophers, called Rosicrucians, were sometimes denominated. In our own times, we have had illuminati, so calling themselves, assembling, in several parts of Europe, to promote plans against religion and social order;

and endeavouring, by every method, to seduce the poor and the ignorant, as well as the rich and learned, into their secret machinations. England soon discovered, that these mock philosophers offered a stone instead of bread, and darkness visible instead of one chattering ray of light. Their execrable labours have been here exposed to detestation and contempt; but Europe yet mourns over the misery and ruin which those labours have occasioned. It is remarkable, that illuminate, as a noun substantive, in our language, is very old in a sense of contempt or reprehension;

implying, that those who assumed the name, took too much upon them.

Another pestilential sect there was, not long since,

of illuminati in Arragon, whose founders were a hypocritical crew of their printers; who, affecting in themselves and their followers a certain angelic perfection, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

These new illuminates have such coggish shifts with them.

Watson, Qualities of State, (1609), p. 44.

Not unlike the refined and quaint illuminators of our time, Laus, Abuse of Mr. Henry, (1614), p. 15.

Such illuminates are our classical brethren!

Montagu, App. to Cæsar, (1685), p. 16.

ILLU'MINATI. * [Latin.] See the substantive ILLU'MINATE.

ILLU'MINATION. n. s. [illumination, Latin;]

illumination, Fr. from illuminare.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body alightened, and an illu- mination created. Raleigh, Hut.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'res are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,

And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryden, Pers.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius givesh to his work. Follen on the Classics.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, and by prophetic illumina- tion are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours,

and the turning them into good and holy uses.

Beacon.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be so good a sufficient contentment to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Sprat, Serm.

ILLU'MINATIVE. adj. [illuminativ, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire; what admits the illumination action of fire, and is not seen, is called air.

Dodgson on Bodies.

ILLU'MINATOR. * n. s. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

Claudian, writing his poems in English, is of some called the first illuminator of the English tongue. Ferrieston, Hist. of Dec. Indul. ch. 7.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illustrators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius givesh to his work. Follen.

To ILLU'MINE † v. a. [illumine, French.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

His understanding was illumined with the beams of divine truth.

Price, Prince Henry's Annals, (1615), p. 12.

To confirm his words, outflow

Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs

Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze

Far round illum'd the bell. Milton, P. L.

What in me is dark,

illumine! what is low, raise and support!

Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cassy, Virgil paid once honest line;

O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

ILLU'SION. n. s. [illuasio, Latin; illusion,

French.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, dust'd, ill'd by magic lights,

Shall raise such artificial spirit,

As, by the strength of their illusions,

Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shaks. Mac.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion.

Beacon, Hen. VII.

So oft they fell

Into the same illusion; not as men,

Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd, Milton, P. L.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavour to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eye,

Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLU'SIVE. adj. [from illusus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The haughty brags, who like false dreams,

Illusive dreams in misyack forms express. Blackmore.

While the fond soul

Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,

Still paints the illusive form. Thomson, Spring.

ILLU'SIVELY. * adv. [from illusive.] In a deceptive manner.

ILLU'SIVENESS. * n. s. [from illusive.] Deception; false appearance. Ash.

ILLU'SORY. adj. [from in and lagorius, Lat. illuasio, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtlety, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath posess'd for a virtue; a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusive use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

To illustrate. ILLUSTRATE v. a. [illustrare, Lat. illustrare, Fr.]

1. To brighten with light.

Then let us borrow from the glorious sun
A little light to illustrate this act.

Moss, Song of the Soul, i. li. 7.
Being illustrated by the sun, it [the front of the house] might yield the more graceful aspect.

Watson on Architecture.

2. To brighten with honour.

Master to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they see all regal power
Given me to quell their pride. Alford, P. L.
These she enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Philips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authors take up popular concerns,
From tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown.

ILLUSTRATION. n. s. [illustratio, Fr. from illustrare.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L. E. K. R.
Space and duration, ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLUSTRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthusiasms onto the people. Brown.

Purging and pruning with all industry,
What's dead or useless, less demonstrative,
What's dull or flaccid, sought illustrative.

Moss, Song of the Soul, i. li. 41.
We should suppose this also an additional illustrative note. Biblioth. Bibl. Oxf. i. 47.

ILLUSTRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ILLUSTRATOR. n. s. [Latin; illustrator, Fr.] One who illustrates, brightens, clears, or beautifies. Colgrave.

The right glorious illustrator of virtue.

Chapman, Sonnets at the end of his Homer.
ILLUSTRIOUS. adj. [illustratus, Lat. illustrare, Fr.] One whose own word was at first illustrare. "You may be an ornament to that illustrious family." Lett. in 1566. Sidney State-Pap. vol. i. p. 9.]

1. Bright; shining.

Shaking his illustrious tresses.
Sandys, Ovid. B. 2.

His locks behind,
Illustrous on his shoulders bedrid with wings,
Lay waving round. Milton, P. L. 2.

2. Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South.
Of every nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have chanced into mine. Dryden, Jun.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disclaimed not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest
his charity. Albany.

You carrying with you all the world can lose
To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope.

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

ILLUXURIOUS. * adj. [in and luxuriously.] Not luxuriously.

The widow Vanhomrigh and her two daughters quitted the illustrious soil of their native country, for the more elegant pleasures of the English court. Let. Orrery on Shy, p. 104.

ILL-WILL. n. s. [ill and will.] Disposition to envy or hatred.

Thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.
Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

Ros. Why look you so upon me?
Phib. For no ill-will I bear you.

Shakespeare, As you like it.
ILL-WILLER. n. s. One who wishes or intends ill to another.

If I were a man, I would fight for you; sure you have some ill-willers; I would slay them.

Bacon, and Fl. Caput's Revenge.
Having usually many ill-willers, many disaffected malcontents. Harrison, Works, i. 93.

I'm. Contracted from I am.

Im is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em; formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE. n. s. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.] 1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and supererogation?
St. Matt. xlii. 30.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing;
and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking. Shakespeare.

Thy brother I,
Even like a story image, cold and numb. Shaksp.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion, death.
Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh not the carved image in God's house.
2 Chron. xxxiii. 7.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may 'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shaksp.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his image;
But now two virtuous of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
He made us to his image all agree;
That which is the soul, what that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked beinous fault Lives in his eye. Shakespeare, K. John.

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears.
Dryden, Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the just
I'll show you here at large. Shakespeare.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of night delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angels,
we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angels; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angels. Watts.

IMAGE-WORSHIP. n. s. The worship of images or idols.

They are endeavouring to make provelities, which are started at image-worship.

Trapp, Popery truly stated, P. I.
In 787 another council met at Constantinoople first, and was afterwards translated to Nice, in which the decree of the former synod was explored, and image-worship first established in the church. This council was called, by the express leave, a bogged image-worshipper.

Dig. Bull, Corrupt, of the Ch. of Rome.
To IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things wherof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Philips.

His ear oft fringed with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future bad shall join
In sad similitude of grief to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more.

Pope.

IMAGERY. n. s. [from image.] 1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Spenker, F. Q.

When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraits, and imagery;
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden, Æn. Tale.

Your gift of two large golden be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden, Æn.

2. Show; appearance.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastic imagery. Dry. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Scattered from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear. Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholic fancy, such as mixing men mistakes for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

5. Form; make.

They are our brethren, and pieces of the same
imagery with ourselves. Fetham, Res. li. 53.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imaginer.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, Fr.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will require what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINANT. n. s. One who is prone to form strange ideas.

Fecundation is the power and act of imagination, intensive upon our bodies, than the body of the imaginant. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

The air of common report, or the single testimony of some superstitious and melancholy imaginist. Spenser on Prodiges, (1665), p. 225.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakspeare.

Expectation whirled me round;
The imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchains my sense.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imagination, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures?

Addison, Cato.

IMAGINATION. n.s. [imaginatio, Latin, imagination, Fr. from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present; for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and as pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings.

Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination; when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its image.

Glennville.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away.

Pope.

2. Conception; image of the mind; idea. Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love clears and clears her invention.

Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfeigned imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Better I were without
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woe, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong.

Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme. Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me.

Lam. iii. 60.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion. We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us.

Locke.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginativus, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastic; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oftentimes they do that which they do not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Lay fetters and constraints upon the imaginative and fantastical parts, because our fancy is usually placed with the entertainment of shadows and gauds.

Dr. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

To IMAGINE. v.a. [imaginer, Fr.; imaginar, Lat.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them home, I pray thee, with imagine'd speed.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition?

Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive. They intruded evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device.

Ps. xli. 11.

IMAGINER. n.s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a quarter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

IMAGINING. n.s. [from imagine.] Fancy; imagination.

Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To IMBA'LG. * See To EMBALM.

IMBA'RG. * See EMBARGO.

IMBA'RMEN. * n.s. Bar or opposition. See To EMBAR.

Only her poverity was the maine imberment of her marriage.

Tr. of Boccaccio, (1690), p. 110.

To IMBA'RK. * See To EMBARKE.

To IMBA'RS. * v.a. [from barra.] To lay up in a barn.

If a farmer hath both a fair harvest, and that also well in and imberred, and continuing safe there, yet if God give him not the grace to use and utter this well, all his advantages are to his loss.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 30.

To IMBA'RS. * v.a. To debuse. See To EMBASE.

They that imbase coin and metals, and obtrude them for perfect and natural.

Dr. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 8. ch. 4.

To IMBA'SE. * v.n. To sink in value.

The books of the learned themselves, by ambitiously heaping up the conceits and authorities of other men, increase much in the bulk, but do as much imbase in true value.

Hales, Rem. p. 25.

To IMBA'STARDIZE. * v.a. [from bastardize.] To convict of being a bastard, or degenerate.

The rest, imbastardized from the ancient nobleness of their ancestors, are ready to fall fast.

Milton, Economical. Pref.

To IMBA'THE. * v.a. [from bathe.] To bathe all over. Not of Milton's coinage, as I long since had an opportunity of proving.

Fear had taught to barre
His knees from desire to press too farre,
To imbathe themselves.

Tasso's Aminta Engl. (1698), A. I. S. I.

And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavens, strew'd with asphodel.

Milton, Comus.

Methinks a sovran and reviving joy must needs rush into the bosom of him that reads or hears, and the sweet odour of the returning good imbathe his soul with the fragrance of Heaven.

Milton, of Reg. in Eng. B. I.

IMBE'CILE.† adj. [imbecillitas, Lat.; imbecille, Fr.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

We were, in respect to God, imbecile and lost.

Barrow, Works, vol. ii. § 22.

To IMBE'CILE.† v.a. [from the adjective.] This word is corruptly written embezzle. Dr. Johnson.—This is not the fact.

Embezzle, or embezzle, is formed from a very different word. See To EMBEZZLE. Our old lexicography defines "to imbecill, to purloin," but not to weaken. See Bullokar's Expositor. Bishop Jeremy Taylor uses the verb before us, imbecile, simply in the sense of weaken, without any allusion to injustice, which Dr. Johnson affixes to it in the example from that great man's "Holy Living;" but a second from his "Holy Dying" will prove what I assert.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations; simply, to weaken.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbecilled.

Dr. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

It is a sad calamity, that the fear of death should so imbecill man's courage and understanding.

Dr. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 7. ch. 3.

To IMBE'CILLITATE. * v.a. [from imbecillity.] To weaken; to render feeble.

The man, being skilful in natural magic, did use all the artifices his subtilty could devise to imbecillitate the earl.

Arthur Wilson's Hist. of James I.

IMBE'CILITY. n.s. [imbecillitas, Fr.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argues imbecillity and imperfection.

Hobbes.

No imbecillity of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein.

Hobbes.

We that are strong must bear the imbecillity of the impotent, and not please ourselves.

Hobbes.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecillity, the fitter and likelier to be brooked.

Hobbes.

Strength would be lord of imbecillity. And the rude son would strike his father dead.

Shakspeare.

Imbecillity, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them.

Arg. Clarendon.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecillity immediately seized and laid hold of him.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

IMBE'DDED. * See EMBEDDED.

A number of glands imbedded in the cellular substance.

Outlines of Anatomy, ch. l. § 5.

IMBE'LLICK. * adj. [in and bellicus, Latin.] Not warlike. See BELLIC. Cockerm.

The imbecill peasant, when he comes first to the field, shakes at the report of a musket.

Julius, Sin Signat. (1635), p. 423.

To IMBE'ZZLE. * v.a. To steal; to purloin; to take from. See To EMBEZZLE.

He could, by his providence, preserve the books so written from being imbezelled or corrupted.

Goodman, Writ. Ec. Conf. p. 13.

IMBEZZLEMENT. * n.s. Theft. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

I must require you to use diligence in preventing specially those purloinings and imbezementations, which are of plate, vessels, or whatsoever within the king's house.

Bacon, Charges, Art. p. 13.

To IMBI'BE.† v.a. [imbibo, Lat.; imbiber, Fr.]

1. To drink in; to draw in. A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbeeth more of the salt.

Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes,
Commissions, perquisites, aid bribes.

Swift.

Illumin'd wide
The dewy-skirted clouds imbued the sun.

Thomson, Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises.

Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom.

Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave translates the French imbiber into "imbued, moistened, soaked, or drunk in." But see To IMBUE.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallic salt.

Newton.

IMBIBER. n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphurous steams.

Robinson.

IMBIBITION. n. s. [Imbibe, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the coagulation of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation.

Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but to moisture not; and to all manifestation there is required an imbibition.

Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected.

Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community.

Addison, Free.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame?

South.

3. To exasperate.

IMBITTERER. n. s. [from the verb.] That which makes bitter.

The fear of death has always been considered as the greatest enemy of human quiet, the polluter of the feast of happiness, and the embitterer of the cup of joy.

Johnson in Taylor's Sermon.

To IMBLAZON. v. a. [blazon, Fr.] To adorn with figures of heraldry. See To EMBLAZON.

To describe races and games, Or tiling furniture, imblazon'd shields.

Milton, P. L.

IMBLAZONRY.* See EMBLAZONRY.

To IMBODDY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals

An heavenly form embodied, and array'd
With robes of light.

Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immortalized spirits, yet it is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude.

Glennville, Scripta.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I lay you am so imbodied yours,

That she which marries you must marry me.

Shakespeare.

Never since created, man

Met such embodied force, as oam'd with thee,
Could merit more than that small infantry

Milton, P. L.

Ward'd off by cranes.
Under their hand embodied all in one.

Milton, P. L.

Then Cæsar came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops embodied from the Sabine land.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those straits we shall meet with the same metal or mineral embodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To IMBODDY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being.

Milton, Comas.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday,
and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one.

Locke.

To IMBOLL. v. n. [from boil.] To exstimate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not now in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold.

Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:

Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy.

Shakespeare, Timon.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion, Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his.

Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay.

Dryden, Æn.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms.

Swift.

IMBONITY.* n. s. [in and bonitas, Lat.] Want of goodness. See BONITY.

All fears, griefs, suspicions, discomfits, imbonities, inseparably are swallowed up and drowned in this Euripus, this Irish sea.

Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 213.

To IMBORDER.* v. a. [from border.] To terminate; to bound.

Thick-woven arborets, and flowers

Imborder'd on each bank.

Milton, P. L.

To IMBOSK.* v. n. [imboscare, Ital. "to enter a wood, to lay in ambush, to take shelter as a deer doth." Florio, 1598.] To lie concealed.

They seek the dark, the bushy, the tangled forest; they would imbosc.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

To IMBOSK.* v. a. [See the neuter verb.] To conceal; to hide.

Requesting him to depart, and imbosc himself in the mountain, which was very near.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. fol. 46. b.

To IMBOSS.* See To EMBOSS.

To IMBOSSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,

By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son.

Milton, P. L.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd.

Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,

Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurse.

Sidney.

Who glad t'imbosom his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear.

Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,

Which was imbound'd in this beautiful clay.

Shakespeare.

To IMBOW.† v. a. [from bow.] The word at first was embow. See what is noticed, in respect to the orthography, in EMBOW.] To arch; to vault.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off.

Bacon.

To IMBOW'EL.* See To EMBOWEL. Donne writes it imbowel.

To IMBOW'ER.† v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

You whom highest heaven imbowers,

Praise the Lord with all your powers.

Sirind, Po. calisi.

A shady bank.

Thick over-head with verdant roof imbower'd.

Milton, P. L.

And stooping thence retir'd
In spotless peace retir'd.

Thomson.

To IMBOWER.* v. n. See To EMBOWER.

IMBOWMENT. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment new any of the walls left.

Derham.

TO IMBROWEN. v. a. [Ital. imbrunir.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote The open field, and where the unpeep'd shade

The foot grows black with dust imbrown'd.

And in thy pocket glingling half-smote. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear Imbrown the slope, and not on the pasture. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Heavily smote. Pope.

TO IMBUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with in or em. I have here sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed Of mighty wounds, with wide wounds opened.

And by thy cruel darts to these subdu'd. Spenser.

There streams a spring of blood so fast

From those deep wounds, as all endur'd the face

Of that secured caulf. Daniel, Civil Wars.

The merciless Turks, imbued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,

Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbue.

Spenser.

Lucius pities the offenders, That would imbue their hands in Cato's blood.

Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are imbued,

Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

There, where two ways in equal parts divide,

The dreadful monster from each dency'd

Two bleeding babes depending at her side;

Whose panting vitals, warm with life she draws,

And in their hearts embues her cruel cauld. Pope.

His virgin sword Ægæus' veins imbued;

The murder fell, and blood stood 'd for blood.

Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbue his hands in blood.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathos kisses, and did oft imbue

The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips.

Spenser, F. Q.

TO IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute, Ital. imbrutare.] To degrade to brutality.

We find how far natural corruption, improved with ignorance and want of education or religion, can imbrute the manners of men.

By, Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

I, who ere contemned With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd

Into a beast, and, mix'd with bestial sense,

This essence to incarnate and imbute.

Milton, P. L.

TO IMBUE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clouded by contagion, Imbodies and imbrates, till the quite lose The divine property of her first being.

Milton, Comm.

Her face with blushing shamefacedness imbued.

Spenser, B. I.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles.

Dodley.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour.

Hogge.

Where a mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tintured with the colour.

Woodward.

TO IMBUE. v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French. The word is old in our lexicography; and Sherwood defines it "to pursue up."

IME. n. s. [Su. Goth. imm, ime, vapor; Sax. hyjme.] Rime. Used in this sense in the Craven Dialect.

IMITABILITY. n. s. [imitabilis, Lat.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat.] imitable, Fr.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How all the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable virtues, I account the relation of them improper for history.

Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers.

Atterbury.

TO IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Lat.; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practice to make swifter motions than any out of your markets.

Bacon.

Bromston, Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield, And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden, Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. s. [imitatio, Lat.; imitation, Fr.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestic for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, Man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace, Was imitative of the first in Thracia. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. s. [Lat. imitator, French.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet.

IMITATORSHIP. n. s. [from imitator.] The office or employment of an imitator.

My soul adores judicial scholarship; But when to servile imitatorship Some supine Athenian pen is prest, 'Tis worse than apish.

Marton, Scourge of Vill. ill. 9.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat.; immaculé, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To purify this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ.

Hooker.

His words are hands, his thoughts are oracles; His love sincere, his virtues immaculate. Shakspeare.

The king, whose countenances count a mint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age.

Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure From other guilt as that Heaven did not hold One more immaculate. Denham, Scylla.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain, From whence this stream, through muddy passages, Hadst had his current and del'd himself. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

IMMACULATELY. adv. [from immaculate.] Without blemish; purely.

IMMACULATENESS. n. s. [from immaculate.] Purity; innocence.

Cadour and immaculateness of conversation. W. Mountague, Dr. Ess. P. I. (1648.) p. 140.

IMMACULATE. adj. [from mail.] Wearing mail or armour.

Swarms

Of men immail'd. Browne, Brit. Poet. il. 4.

IMMABLE. adj. [in and malleus, a hammer, Latin.] Not to be wrought upon; not to be impressed.

Oh the stiffness of a Homish seal! how immalleable does it render their story natures to the force of all humane impressions!

Memoirs of Sir Edmund Burke, (1682.) p. 79.

TO IMMANGLE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind With all thy charms, although this corporal rind Thou hast immangled. Milton, Comm.

IMMANE.† adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of the word, and gives no example. It is, by our old writers, often coupled with cruelly, to denote excessive or monstrous cruelty; and Cockeram defines immane, cruel, wild. See also IMMANELY.

Doth it not appertain to the just judgement of God to avenge such immane cruelties?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 179. Those immane cruelties, which divers have exercised upon men's dead bodies.

Fielding, Attila, (1622), p. 207.

Immane Atreus, weeping Pleiades, Orion, with all storms plows up the seas.

Sandys, Job, p. 15.

What immane difference is there between the twenty-fourth of February, and commencement of March?

Kilgus, B. i. ch. 17, §. 3.

IMMANUEL.† adv. [from immane.] Monstrously; cruelly.

They have not done the same by the power of miracles and integrity of life, but only by dint of sword, which did to immanely and barbarously make havoc of them, to the destruction of some millions. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 178. A man of excessive strength, valiant, liberal, and fair of aspect, but immanely cruel.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. i.

IMMANENCY.† n. s. [in and maneo, Lat.] Internal dwelling.

The immanency and inherency of this power in Jesus is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, Fr.; in and maneo, Lat.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow views, we ascribe intelligence, volition, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends onto, he wills and intends from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMANITY.† n. s. [immanitas, Lat.; immanitè, Fr.] A word very common in Shakespeare's time, and since; but Dr. Johnson has no other example than the single one from Shakespeare; and the commentators on the poet, explaining its meaning, have yet left it unsupported by any other instance.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural, that such immanity and bloody strife should reign among professors of new faiths.

Shakespeare.

Maximinos, for the immanity of his mind and doings, was usually termed Cyclops, Busiris, Phalaris, Typhon.

Dante King, Stern. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 25.

We shall be but most assured to taste of their fierce immanities. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 138.

A belluine kind of immanity never ranged so among men.

Boswell, Lett. iii. 15.

The poet brings in his golden blinding the rusticks for their immanity.

Sir T. Herbert, Trac. p. 833.

IMMARCESIBLE.† adj. [in and marcesco, Latin; immarcescibile, old Fr. Cotgrave, and Roquefort.] Unfading.

So unintermitting discipline, that you forget not mercy; that when the Chief Shepherd shall come, you may receive the immarcescible crown of glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Form of Councils of Bishops, (1629). This crown, which Thou hast laid up for me, is immarcescible.

Ep. Holt, Med. of the Love of Christ, §. 11. They were inflamed with the desire of enlarging the kingdom of Christ here, and of obtaining that immarcescible crown hereafter.

Mary on the Seven Churches, ch. 3.

If the prize which we expect in the race of our imperfect obedience be an immarcescible crown.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

Not for a garland of flowers, but for wreaths of immarcescible glory.

Hallywell, Midampur, p. 105.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My powers are unfit, Chapman, Odyssey.

To IMMARTIAL.† v. a. [in and martial.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nose, to immortal our noted outward garments.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

With thy deity Shade and immortal the errors of my pen.

Marton, Pign. Image, Addr. to Good Opinion, (1598).

IMMUTABLE.† adj. [in and matchable.] Not matchable; peerless.

Where learned More and Gardiner I met, Men in those times immutable for wit.

Mir. for Mag., p. 630.

IMMATERIA. adj. [immaterial, Fr. in and materia, Lat.]

1. INCORPOREAL; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontents, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever do dwell. Hosier.

As then the soul a substance hath alone, Better the body, in which she is confin'd;

So hath she not a body of her own, But is a spirit and immaterial mind. Devics.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

Deacy of Pity. No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson.

2. UNIMPORTANT; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected. Dr. Johnson.—This censure is questionable, when the second sense of material is considered; to which this is opposed. See MATERIAL.

IMMATERIALITY.† n. s. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

There are sicknesses that walk in darkness, and there are exterminating angels that fly wrapt up in the curtains of immateriality.

Ep. Taylor, Pinner. Sermon on the Count. of Corbary.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality.

Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.]

In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporeal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMATERIALIZED.† n. s. [from immaterial.] One who professes immateriality.

Dr. George Berkeley became founder of a sect, called immaterialists. Boswell, Lett. to Ld. Carteret.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Lat.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville, Scrypica.

IMMATERIALIZEDNESS. n. s. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIALIZED.† adj. [in and materia, Lat.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Dacot.

After a long inquiry of things immaterial in matter, I intrepone some object which is immaterial, or less materia; such as this of immateriality. Dacot.

Thilo makes all immaterial beings to be created in this first day. More, Conj. Coll. p. 144.

IMMATERIALITY.† adj. [immaterial, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.

Immaturation or unripe hopes. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. §29.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fullness or completion.

The land enterprise of Panama was an ill measured and immaterial counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Dacot.

This is your time for faction and debate, For partial favour, and perverted hate: Let now your immaterial disposition cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

How were we affected here in England for prince Henry's immaterial death!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 163. We are pleased, and call not that death immaterial, if a man lives till seventy.

By Taylor, Rule of Living Hdg.

IMMATURELY.† adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

They ripen though you crop them immaturely.

Sir T. Herbert, Trac. p. 235. Had not his thread of life been immaturely cut, he might have surpassed the age of any of his royal ancestors.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 110. Must noble Hastings immaturely die?

Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

IMMATURENESS.† n. s. [from immature.]

IMMATUREITY.† n. s. [from immature.] Incapacity; a state short of completion.

In state, many things at first are crude and hard to digest, which time and deliberation can supply and concoct; but in religion, wherein is an immaturity, nothing out of season, it goes far otherwise. Milton, Ros. of Ch. Gov. B. i.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgement. Glanville.

IMMATERIALITY. n. s. [immaterial, Lat.]

Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this plégen proceed white cold tumours, viscosity, and consequently immobility of the joints.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them.

Hosier.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, woful, wild.

Milton, P. L.

Immeasurable strength they might behold,
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean.

Milton, S. A.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with that can see such tremendous objects wading through those immeasurable depths of ether?

Adrian, Guardian.

Not friends are there, our vessels to convey,
Nor ours to cut the immeasurable way.

Pope, Odyssey.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure. The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their death.

Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey.

Milton, P. L.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Exceeding common measure.

Geniuses, and such dreadful weights,
As far exceed men in their immeasurable might.

Spenser, F. Q. li. s. 8.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature.

Clyene.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with immechanical notions.

Mead.

IMMEDICIACY. n. s. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependence. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakspeare.

He led our powers,

Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Shakspeare, C. Lear.

IMMEDDIATE. adj. [immediate, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens.

Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure.

Abel.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate.

Shakspeare, Timon.

Death discount'd that day,
Which he proclaims already vain and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
By some immediate stroke.

Milton, P. L.

But she, how'er, of victory sure,
Contents the wrath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate power,
Calls cruel silence to her aid.

Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop: is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God.

South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton
Immediately to marry.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

For which immedicabile blow,
Due to that time, me dooming heaven ordain'd,
Wherein confusion absolutely reign'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 529.

Wherein had occurred such abundance of malignant humours, that it might truly be said, it was immedicabile.

T. of Roccotini, (1695) p. 136.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicabile,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification.

Milton, S. A.

IMMELDIOUS. adj. [in and melodious.] Not melodious; unmusical.

My lute be as thou wast, when thou didst grow
With green mother in some shady grove.
When immedious winds but us'd thee move.

Drummond, Sonn. to his Lute.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering; unworthy of remembrance.

Huloet, and Bullokar.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some immemorial in writing; yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of so aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat.

South.

IMMEMORIALITY. n. s. [from immemorial.] Beyond memory.

Both word and thing being immemorially known in Greece.

Bentley, Phil. Lij. 4. § 50.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, French; immensus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!

That all this good of evil shall produce!

Milton, P. L.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being.

Greus.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass.

Bentley.

The immensity of the victory, and the consequences that might have attended it.

Ld. Chardon, Ljfr. ii. 512.

IMMENSITY. n. s. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repenting, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity.

He that will consider that the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may shew that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings.

Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are mine, are centers.

Blackmore, Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. s. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

One God of immensurable majesty.

Their heads are grown, their souls are immerged in matter, and drowned in the moistures of an unwholesome cloud.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1685) p. 308.

IMMERIT. n. s. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be so.

Buckling.

IMMERITED. adj. [Lat. immeritus.] Not deserved.

Those, on whom I have in the pious manner showed my bounty, and immerited favour, have darted on me.

King Charles in the Princely Palace, p. 270.

IMMERITOUS. adj. [Latin, immeritus.] Undeserving; of no value.

A frothy, immeritous, and undeserving discourse.

Milton, Coleridge.

TO IMMURSE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] 1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood

More than a mile immured within the wood;

At once the wild was laid.

Dryden.

They observed that they were immured in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world.

Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immured in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them.

Addison, Freethinker.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world; we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Altebury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Altebury.

IMMERSED. adj. [immergens, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERSION. n. s. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Altebury.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

If it were true, that all the swallows which inhabit a country, plunge into the water or mud annually in October, and rise from their subaqueous bed in the following April; there must have been frequent opportunities of observing them, either in the instant of their immersion, or, what is much more curious, in the moment of their emergence, or during their long repose at the bottom of the pool. Fr. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, sever from the rules of their body faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Altebury.

It was the Platonic doctrine, that humane souls or minds descended from above, and were sowed in generation, that they were stunned, stupefied, and intoxicated by this descent and immersion into animal nature. Ep. Berkeley, Ser. § 113.

IMMERSED. adj. [in and method.]

Not having method; without regularity.

Their sudden thoughts, immersed discourses, and slovenly sermons. Waterman, Apol. of Learn. (1655), p. 157.

Brown.

2. Not liable to be carried away; real in law.

When an executor meddles with the immovable estate, before he has seized on the movable goods, it may be then appraised from the execution of sentence.

Aylmer, Paragon.

3. Unshaken; unaffected.

How much happier is he, who, centring on himself, remains immovable, and smiles at the madness of the dance about him!

Dryden, Den Sebastian.

IMMOVABLENESS.† n. s. [from immovable.]

The state or quality of being immovable.

Ash.

IMMOVABLY.† adv. [from immovable.] In a state not to be shaken.

Immutably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward.

Alteryth.

To IMMOULD.* v. a. [in and mould.] To form; to mould.

Cure with her potion, charm'd in gold,
U's'd many souls in beauteous bodies to immould.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. p. 49.

IMMUND.* adj. [immunde, Fr. immundus, Lat.] Unclean. Not now in use.

Through their own nastiness and sluttishness, immund, and sordid manner of life, they suffer their air to putrify, and themselves to be choked up.
Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 81.

IMMUNDITY.* n. s. [Fr. immundité.] Uncleanliness; impurity.

Nor is there any moral immundity of a more dangerous imputation, than this of wanton discourse.

W. Montague, Dec. En. P. i. (1648, p. 138.

IMMUNITY.* n. s. [immunité, Fr. immunitas, Lat.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.
Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness.
Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor.
Sidney.

Simon went to Demetrius, to be able he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil.
1 Mac. xiii. 34.

The laity involuntarily aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy.
Sprot, Scem.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antiodical condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures.

But this answer'd condition of the crown,
Immunity from errors, you disown.
Dryden.

To IMMURE.* v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emurer, old French, so that it might be written emmuré.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Play, you ancient stones, these tender babies,
Whom every hath immur'd within your walls!
Shakespeare.

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
And shall I think in silver she's immur'd?
Shakespeare.

At the first descent on shore he was not im-mured with a wooden vessel, but he did continued the landing in his long boat.
Clifton.

Lynceus immur'd it with a wall.
Shakespeare, Troilus.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure
On earth, she, when escap'd, is wise and pure.
Denham.

IMMURE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wall;
an enclosure, as in Shakespeare, but perhaps now where else.

Their vow is made
To ransom Troy; within whose strong immure
The ravi'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps.
Shakespeare, Proth. Tr. and Crea.

IMMURAL.* adj. [in and mural.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.
All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immural, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
We consider the immural noise of all swans we ever behold or heard of.
Bacon.

IMMUTABILITY.* n. s. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilis, Fr. immuable.] Exemption from change; invariableness;
unchangeableness.

To shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his covenant.
Heb. vi. 17.
The immutability of God strive unto, by working after one and the same manner.
Hooker.
His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God.

Cheyne, Philat. Principia.
The Egyptians are the healthiest people of the world, by reason of the immutability of their air.
Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 147.

IMMUTABLE.* adj. [immutabilis, Lat.] Unchangeable; invariable, unalterable.

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lyve, we have a strong consolation.
Heb. vi.

Thy threatenings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let usd foreye oppress thy land.
Dryden.

IMMUTABLENESS.* n. s. [from immutable.] Un-changeableness.

IMMUTABLY.* adv. [from immutable.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.

His love is like his essence, immutably eternal.
Boyle.

IMMUTATION.* n. s. [Lat. immutatio.] Change;
alteration.

Lo, what delightful immutations
On her soft flowing vest we contemplate.
My. Reynolds on the Passion, ec. 21.

Strong and violent hath been the immutation which sudden joy hath wrought in the body.
My. Reynolds on the Passion, ec. 21.

To IMMUTE.* v. a. [immuto, Lat.] To change; to alter.

God can immediately immute, change, corrupt, destroy, or annihilate whatsoever pleaseth His divine majesty.

Salter, Treat. of Angels, (1615,) p. 106.

IMP.* n. s. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout,
a twig. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Steevens and Mr. Chalmers give the same etymon.
"But Mr. Steevens needed not to have travell'd to Wales," says Mr. H. Tooke,
"for that which he might have found at home. Our language has absolutely nothing from the Welsh. Imp is the past participle of the Sax. impan, to plant, to graft." Div. of Purl. ii. 311.— Without stopping to notice here the sweeping assertion as to the Welsh language, which will be considered in another part of this dictionary, I may add that the Germ. impfen, is also to graft;
and that the earliest usage of our word,
is in the sense of the shoot of a tree.]

1. A graft, scion, or sucker; "an imp, or young slip of a tree,"
Baret.

Of feeble trees these comen wretched imps,
Chaucer, Monk's Prol.

Boughs, branches, twigs, young imps, sprays,
and buds.
Newton, Herbal to the Bible, 1587.

2. A son; the offspring; progeny; a youth.
That most noble imp, the prince's grace, your most dear son.
L. Cromwell to K. Hen. VIII.

And thou, most dreaded imp of highest Jove,
Fair Venus' son!
Spenser, F. Q.

That false city, wherein make shade
So many learned imps, that shoot abroad,
And with their branches spread all Britany.
Spenser, F. Q.

The tender imp was weaned from the teat.

Forfas.
A lad of life, an imp of fame, Shakspeare, Hen. P.
Loath them as the most basely-begotten imps.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Proving
A toward imp, I call'd him home.

Andersen, Esop. upon Benedictus, (1575,) fol. 38, b.
Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan.
Hooker.

The serpent — after long debate irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,
Fit venge, fitted imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions lodge
From sharpest sight.
Milton, P. L.

As soon as you can hear his knell,
This god on earth turns down — I in bell;
And, lo! his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his slaves wait.
Swift.

4. An addition to a beehive. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

To IMP.* v. a. [impio, to engraff, Welsh;
to impar, Sax. impfen, Germ.]

1. To plant; to graft. It was formerly also used as a verb neuter. Now wholly obsolete.

Thus taught and prescrib'd hath Reson;
But Love yuppeth hath her sermon,
That was so imp'd in my thought,
That her doctrine I set at naught.
Shakespeare, Rom. II. 5137.

Leysings I imp'd,
Tyll they beare leaves of smoothish speech.
Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 52, b.

2. To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with adscititious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings.
Shakespeare.

This bird was hatched in the council of Lateran, fully plumed in the council of Trent, and now lastly hath her feathers imp'd by the modern ca-pist.
Bp. Hall, Oct. fest. ec. 15. § 1.

New Rebels rise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp their serpent-wings.
Milton, Sonnet.

Help, ye tart satyrists to imp my rage,
With all the scorpions that should whip this age.
Clarendon.

With curd and canvas from rich Hamburg sent,
His navy's motled wings he imps once more.
Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving man at first, and short of thighs;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to leas with pointed wings.
Dryden.

The Mercury of heaven, with silver wings,
Imp'd fur the flight, to overtake his ghout.
Southern.

IMPACABLE.* adj. [Lat. impacatus.] Not to be softened or appeased.

Freed from bands of impacable fate,
And power of death, they live for aye above.
Spenser, Ruins of Time.

To IMPACT.* v. a. [impactus, Lat.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted to thick and confusedly together.
Woodward on Fossils.

To IMPAIR. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impair his cause. Shelley.

To IMPAIR. v. a. [empair, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence. See To EMPAIR.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hobbes.

Objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milton, P. L.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton, P. L.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt the approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

To IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair quoth he, but reason can repair. Spenser, F. Q.
IMPAIR. n. s. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not now used.

The ladies think it a most desperate impair to their quickness of wit. H. Jonson, Epicoene.

A luncheon, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by sight than dust of steel. Brown.

IMPAIR. n. s. [impar, Lat.] Unsuitable. Obsolete.

What he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgement guides his bounty.
Nor dignifies an impar thought with breath. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Nor is it more impar to an honest and absolute man. Chapman, Tr. of the Shield of Homer, (1598), Pref.

IMPAIR. n. s. [from impair.] That which impairs.

Immoderate labour and immoderate study are equally impairers of health. Warburton.

IMPAIRMENT. n. s. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

Cold and moist are the qualities which work an impairment in the reasonable part. Cicero, Trist. of Wro, (1591).

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMPAIRABLE. n. s. [in and palatable.] Not suitable to the palate; not pleasing to the taste; disagreeable.

To IMPALE. v. See EMPALE.

IMPALEMENT. v. See EMPALEMENT.

To IMPALLID. v. a. [from pallidus, Lat.] To make pale.

It [Hary] is the green-ashedness of the soul, that, feeding upon cool and puling rubbish, impallid all the body to a hectic leanness. Feltham, Res. ii. 56.

To IMPALM. v. a. [empalmer, Fr.; in and palma, Lat.] To seize or take into the hand; to grasp. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPALEABILITY. n. s. [from impalpable.] The state or quality of not being perceived by touch.

He [pope Gregory the Great] and Eusebius, the patriarch of Constantinople, had a curious dispute, whether the bodies of the righteous, after the resurrection, should be solid, or thinner than the air? Gregory was for the palpability, and Eusebius for the impalpability; and the dispute ended, as it is to be supposed, in a grievous quarrel. Jortin, Remarks on Ecc. Hist. vol. iii. p. 170. (ed. 1805).

IMPALEABLE. n. s. [impalpable, Fr.; in and palpable.]

1. Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Hog.

2. Not coarse or gross.

His own religion from its simple and impalpable form was much less exposed to the ridicule of scenic exhibition. Warton, Hist. E. p. iii. 200.

IMPALETE. n. s. [impanelus, low Lat. from in and pailus.] Embodied in bread.

See EMPALETE.

This speech meaneth not that the body of Christ is implete.

Alg. Cressner, Anas. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 369.

To IMPALMATE. v. a. [impanelus, low Lat.] To embody with bread.

If the elements really contain such immense treasures, what need have we to look up to the natural world above? or what have we to do but to look down to those impanelated riches, to the elements ennobled with all graces and virtues, and replenished with that very divinity which makes the humanity so considerable? Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 64.

IMPANATION. n. s. [impanelus, Fr. from impanelus, low Lat.] A supposed subsistence of the body of Christ with the species of bread in the Lord's supper. See CONSUBSTANTIATION.

Forasmuch as he is joined to the bread but sacramentally, there followeth no impanation thereof; no more than the Holy Ghost is inanimate, that is to say, made of water, being sacramentally joined to the water in baptism.

Alg. Cressner, Anas. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 368.
Some have imagined that our Lord's divinity becomes personally united with the elements, as well as with his own natural body, having in that sense two personal bodies. This conceit has sometimes gone under the name of "assumption," as it imports the Delia's assuming the elements into a personal union; and sometimes it has been called impanation, a name following the analogy of the word "transubstantiation." Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 54.

IMPANEL. v. See EMPALE.

TO IMPARADISE. v. a. [from paradisiare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did overcloud it. Sidney, Arcad.

For there that soul imparadised lies. Davies, W's Pilgrim, sign. N. i. b.
O my bright lovely brook, whose name doth bear the sound
Of God's first garden plot, the imparadised ground. Drayton, Polyd. B. 30.

All my souls be
Empanelled in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne, Poems, p. 20.

Thus these two,
Impanelled in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton, P. L.

IMPARALLELED. n. s. [in and parallel.] Not to be paralleled; unmatchable.

That this dear price should be paid for a little wild mirth, or gross and corporal pleasure, is a thing of such imparalleled folly, that if there were not too many instances before us, it might seem incredible. Burnet, Life of I. d. Rochester, p. 168.
IMPARADONABLE. n. s. [in and pardonable.] Irremissible.

Not that it is in its nature imparadonable. South, Ser. v. 325.

IMPARITY. n. s. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jaggedness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Difference in degree either of rank or excellence.

He, who by the hand of his holy Apostle, founded this church of Crete in Titus, and his elders in a sweet and decent imparity and subordination, must maintain his own ordinance amongst us also. Alg. Cressner, Anas. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 369.

To IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common. The orthography seems to be empark. See To EMPARK.

IMPARLANCE. v. See EMPARLANCE.

To IMPART. v. a. [impartir, old Fr. to give, Lacombe; impartio, Lat.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

As in confession the revealing is for the cure of a man's heart, so secret men impart the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts,
Wast wont, I mine to thee wast wont to impart. Milton, P. L.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partner.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton, P. L.
IMPARTIAL. adj. [impartialis, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jury is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden, Ann.

IMPARTIALIST. n. s. [from impartial.] One who is impartial.

I am profoundly enough an impartialist. Hog.

IMPARTIALITY. n. [impartialitas, Fr.; from impartialis.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to bite the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgement; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy.

IMPARTMENT. n. s. [from impart.] Communication of knowledge; disclosure.

Not in use.
It becoms you to go away with it,
As if to some impartment did desire
To you alone.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich.

Over this gulf
Impassible, impervious, let us try,
To found a path from hell to that new world.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts.

IMPASSABLENESS. n. s. [from impassable.] Incapability of admitting passage.

*As no carts used to come here by reason of the impassable of the boggy soil, it is a common proverb, That all the carts which come to Cromwell were shod with silver.

Cromwell, Trav. through Gl. Brit. (Lincolnshire).

IMPASSIBILITY. n. s. [impassibility, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

These bodies of ours shall come out of their graves with all their parts entirely as they now are; altered indeed, I confess, in quality, in agility, in glory and splendour, in immortality.

Hales, Rem. Scrm. at the End, p. 22.
Two divinites might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand.

IMPASSIBLE. adj. [impassible, Fr. in and passio, Lat.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

This most pure part of the soul, and (as Aristotle sayeth) divine, impassible, and incorruptible, is named in Latin, "Intellectus."

After Thy resurrection and knowledge of Thine impassible condition, it was not strange for them to talk of Thy kingdom.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some consolation.

Secure of death, I should condemn thy dart,
Though naked and impassible depart.

IMPASSIBLENESS. n. s. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reverse all the actualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibility of the next?

IMPASSION. v. a. [in and passion.] To move with passion; to affect strongly.

See TO IMPASSION. Milton's empassion'd, so given by Dr Johnson, should be impassion'd, as it is here, and not as an adjective, as Dr Johnson has pronounced it.

So, standing, moving, or to high up grown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began.

In the impassion'd man
Concealing art with art, the poet sunk.
Thomson, Liberty, P. II.

IMPASSIONATE. adj.

1. Strongly affected. See IMPASSIONATE.
2. Without feeling; from passion.

A kind of stupidity or impassionate hurt.
These reproaches we may take cool and calmly, as that Stoic philosopher did, who whilst he was discoursing of being free from passions, (it being the doctrine of that sect, that a wise man should be impassionate), a rude fellow spat purposely in his face; and when he was asked, whether he was not angry, answered, No, truly, I am not angry, but I doubt whether I should not be angry at such an abuse: but there is a God that will not put up our contumelies so; we strike his servants on earth, and he feels it in heaven.

TO IMPASSIONATE. v. a. [from impassion.] To affect powerfully.

It is evident in the Gospel, that our Saviour Christ was one while deeply impassioned with sorrow.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty passions were,
Fors without bodies, and impassive air.

Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away
And on the impassive ice the lightnings play.

IMPASSIVENESS. n. s. [from impassive.] The state of being impassive.

We find all those figurings of sparsity and impassiveness to prove but coloured and fruitless conceptions.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. I. (1648.) p. 62.

IMPASTATION. n. s. [from impaste.] A mixture of divers materials of different colours, and consistencies, baked or bound together with some cement, and hardened either by the air or fire.

TO IMPASTE. v. a. [impaster, Fr.]
1. To knead or make into dough or paste; to paste; to concrete as into paste.

Horridly wick'd
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets.

2. [In painting.] To lay on colours thick and bold.

IMPATIBLE. adj. [impatibilis, Lat.] Intolerable; not to be borne. Cockram.

IMPATIENCE. n. s. [impatience, Fr. impatientia, Lat.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wife has given way to his impatience.

The experiment I resolved to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience.

2. Vehementness of temper; heat of passion. See 1. how impatience lowereth in your face!

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

Express impatience. No further with your din.

IMPATIENT. adj. [impatient, Fr. impatiens, Lat.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than by raves of praise.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around
And flings about his fount, impatient of the wound.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion; with at before the occasion;

with of, impatience is referred more to the thing; with at, to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel.

Sp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

4. Hot; impatient.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd power.

On the sea prepar'd the vessel stands;
Thy impatient master thy speed demands.

6. Not to be borne.

Ah me! dear lady, which the ymage art
Of ruefull pity and impatient smart.

IMPATIENT. n. s. One who is not able to bear pain; one who is violently agitated by passion.

I have heard and seen some ignorant impatient, who have found themselves to smart with God's scourge, cast a sullen frown back upon him, with Cur me Cordis? See Scamman Scrm. p. 39.

IMPATIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness, Foaming at the mouth, impatiently he raves.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

IMPATRONIZATION. n. s. [impatronization, Fr. from impatronize.] An absolute mastery, signiory, or possession of.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood. See TO IMPATRONIZE.

TO IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any signiory. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the duchy. See Ham. V. ii.
TO IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [in and patronize.] To impugner; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd,
Some surety for a safe return again.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To IMPEACH.† v. a. [empecher, Fr.]
1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use. Dr. Johnson. — Where used, by our old authors, it is most frequently and properly empeach. See To EMPEACH.

His sons did impach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

If they will impach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

A delusion on my throat impach my utterance.

2. To accuse by public authority.

They were both *impach*ed by a house of commons.

Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had *impach*ed.

3. To bring into question.

You do impach your modesty too much.
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not.

Shakespeare, Midw. N. Dream.

IMPEACH.† n. s. Trial; accusation; not hindrance or impediment, as Dr. Johnson has defined it; for in the following example, which he cites, the speaker is trying a cause, as Mr. Nares has observed, and speaks of it as such; a very necessary correction, which till now had escaped me.

Why, what an intricate impach is this!
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

Shakespeare.

IMPEACHABLE. adj. [from impach.] Ac-cusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been *impach*able.

IMPEACHER. n. s. [from impach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our *impach*ers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.

Gen. of the Tongue.

IMPEACHMENT.† n. s. [empeachment, Fr.]

1. Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says.
But it has always been used, as Mr.
Ritson also has observed, in the same sense, as a legal word in deeds; as, without impachment of waste, i. e. without restraint or hindrance of waste.
It should be written, in this sense, em-peachment.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impachment to the good government thereof.

Speaker in Ireland.

Tell thy king, I do not seek him now;

But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impachment.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impediment to Christian liberty, or continuing of men's consciences.

Sanderson.

2. Public accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devil'd impachment to imprison him.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impachment, was instant with them for the prosecution.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impachment had like to have been fatal to his state.

3. Imputation; reproach.

He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,
Aod did request me, to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impachment to his age,
In having none to travel in his youth.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Fer.

To IMPEARL.† v. a. [empearler, Fr. "to impearle, to deck, or set thick with pearls." Cotgrave.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun

Imparls on every leaf, and every flower.

Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dew of the morning impair every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of
the earth.

Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABILITY.† n. s. [impeccabilis, Fr.
from impeccare.] Exemption from sin;
exemption from failure.

It doth cause an everlasting impeccability.
Saunders, Treat. of Angels, (1613), p. 234.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

Pope.

IMPECCABLE.† adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

If we honour the man, must we hold his pen
impeccable?

Bp. Hall, Hen. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 43.

Thou unkest no man so impeccable, as Thou makest him impeccable.

Dante, Divin. p. 592.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

God is infallible, impeccable, and absolutely perfect.

Skerton, Deism Revealed, Dial. iv.

IMPECCANCY.† n. s. [old Fr. impeccance.]
Impeccability.

Holy spirits dignified, from their purity and impeccancy.

Waterhouse on Pictorial, p. 218.

To IMPEDE.† v. a. [impedio, Lat. Considered by Heylin, in 1656, as an uncouth and unusual word.] To hinder;
to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede its passage.

Decry of Chr. Martyr.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course.

Croce, Manilius.

IMPEDEMENT.† n. s. [impedimentum,
Lat.]

1. Any obstruction to passage; as, a stake, or sharp instrument, to retard the progress of an enemy; a military term.
This primary sense of the word (in and pedes, Lat.) is overlooked by Dr. Johnson.

The children of Israel had prepared for war,
and had shut up the passages of the hill country,
and had fortified all the tops of the high hills,
and had laid impediments in the champion countries.

Judith, v. 1.

2. Hindrance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of boasts grudge out at their bodi-comfort, nor are their senses, led from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

But for my tears,
The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep desire.

Shakespeare.

May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

They bring out that was dead, and had an impediment in his speech.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom;
and that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments.

Free from the impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

Walker.

To IMPEDEMENT.† v. a. [from the noun.]

To obstruct; to hinder.

Less Themistocles, out of hatred to his person, should have withstood and impediment a general good.

Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 15.

IMPEDEMENTAL.† adj. [from impediment.]
Hindering; causing obstruction.

The impedimental stain which intercepts her fruitful love.

W. Messinger, Dev. En. P. II. (1654), p. 132.

To IMPEDE.† v. a. [Lat. impedio, impedire.] To retard; to obstruct.

When diseases do not — impede any faculty.
Mayermayer, Perser. of Health, (1670), p. 25.

IMPEDEMENT.† n. s. [Lat. impeditio.] Hindrance.

IMPEDEMENT.† adj. [from impede.] Causing hindrance; having power to obstruct.

There are other cases concerning things uo-lawful by accident, to respect to the evil effect of the same; to wit, as they may be impeditive of good, or causative, or at the least (for we must use such words) occasionative of evil.

Bp. Sanderson, on Promiss. Oaths, iii. § 11.

To IMPEL.† v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Myrris' mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide.

Dryden, Ode.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast, Psyche.

Protritious gales
Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.

Pope, Odyssey.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impell to sev'ral ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

Pope.

IMPELLENT.† n. s. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

3. What do you mean by voluntary outlay?
C. There that no other impellens but myself, or my own worldly gain or interest, extort from me.

Hammond, Pract. Catech. ii. § 8.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blood impediments and material conveniences, I have not the least conjecture.

Glanville.

IMPELLER.† n. s. [from impell.] One that impels or urges forward.

As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to sin.

South, Sermon, i. 85.

To IMPEL.† v. a. [from pen.] To shut up; to enclose in a narrow place.

Like a sheep impensu'd in the fold.

Fetham, Rev. ii. 59.

He, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain,

Is narrow bowels doth impensu remain.

To IMPEND. v. n. s. [impendo, Lat.]

1. To hang over.

Destruction sure o'er all your steps impensu;

Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends.

Pope, Odyss.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath.

Seaveridge, Sermon.

No story I would of publick woes,
Nor bear advice of impending ills.

Pope, Odyss.

IMPENDENCY. n. s. [impend, Lat.]

The state of hanging over.

The present impendency of God's judgements.

Hammond, Works, iv. 492.

IMPENDENT. adj. [impendens, Lat.]

Impendent; hanging over; pressing closely. In an ill sense.

If the will feared or good be a greater Unstable evil than the good, it over-rides the appetite to aversion.

Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain
Place Ormond's dead: impendent in the air

Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear.

Prior.

IMPENDENCY. n. s. [impend, Lat.]

The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted,
By reason of the impendency of a greater sensible ill.

Hale.

IMPERMEABILITY. n. s. [impenetrabilitas, Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impermeability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPERMETRABLE. adj. [impenetrable, Fr.; impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

Nothing almost escaped that he achieved not, were the thing never so difficult, or (as who saith) impenetrable.

Sir T. Elliot, Gov. fol. 73. b.

With hardening cloud, and forming heat,
The Cyclops did their strokes repeat.

Before the impermeable shield was wrought.

Dryden.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impermeable to the stars or sun.

Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected in gross; in gross, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but dust,
and are thought to be wrapped up in impermeable obscurity.

Lodge.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

2. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impermeable cur

That ever kept with men.

— Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.

Shakespeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impermeable by a sermon of the gospel.

Bp. Taylor.

VOL. II.

IMPERNEABILITY. n. s. [impenetrabile, Lat.] The state of being impenetrable.

Ash.

IMPERNEABLY. adv. [impenetrabile, Lat.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

A cellar of strong sides, and imperneably thick walls, dark and deep.

Dean King, Sermon, 5 Nov. 1608, p. 20.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, imperneably dull.

Pope.

IMPENITENCE. n. s. [impententia, Fr. in IMPENITENCY.] and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impentence.

South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impentence of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life.

Tillotson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impentence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse.

Burns.

IMPENITENT. adj. [impententia, Fr. in penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in angel hath granted some impentent men's requests; as, on the other side, the Apostle's suit be hath of favour and mercy not granted.

Hooker.

They died

Impentent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves.

Milton, P. L.

IMPENITENT. n. s. One who neglects the duty of repentance.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impentents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impentent but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have difficulties to the other.

Hammond.

IMPENITENTLY. adv. [impententia, Lat.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted to the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impententia lived and died in.

Hammond.

What crowds of these, impententia lived,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets!

Pope.

IMPERVIOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.] Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received, as a wingless hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impenetrable insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and stealthy ones on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies.

Drom.

To IMPERVIOUS. v. a. n. [from people.] To form into a community. See TO PEOPLE.

Thou hast helped to impeuple hell.

Beaumont, Psyche, vi. 19.

IMPERATE. adj. [imperialis, Lat.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external impeuple acts of the same habit utterly come.

South.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those impeuple acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul.

Hale.

IMPERATIVE. adj. [imperatīv, Fr.; imperativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

He therefore instead of using an imperative style, by downright commanding such and such things, chose rather to a more gentle and condescending way to inductate what was his will, and our duty.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, increasing, which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood.

Clarke, Lat. Gram.

IMPERATIVELY. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERATORIAL. adj. [Lat. imperatorius.] Commanding.

Moses delivered his law after an imperial way, by saying, Thou shalt not do this, and Thou shalt not do that.

Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 239.

IMPERCEPTIBLE. adj. [impercipibile, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discerned; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature impercipibile by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material evidence, which, by reason of their subtlety, escape our perception.

Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost impercipibile connections, the Theatrum poet is his master.

Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost impercipibile to the touch, and even.

Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost impercipibile, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

IMPERCEPTIBLE. n. s. That which is not immediately perceived or discovered, on account of its smallness.

Microscopes bring to light shoals of living creatures in a spoonful of vinegar, &c. — I should be wonderfully pleased to see a natural history of impercipibiles, containing a true account of such vegetables and animals as grow and live out of sight.

Taylor, No. 119.

IMPERCEPTIBILITIES. n. s. [from imperceptibile.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtlety and impercipibleness to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend.

Hale.

IMPERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptibile.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself impercipibleness, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares.

Addison.

IMPERCIPIENT. adj. [in and percipient.] Not perceiving; not having the power of perception.

There is no supposing the soul to be impercipient in sleep, but by supposing the perceptivity of it to depend upon matter, which I have shewn in many places of this section to be a contradiction; or by supposing that the sleep is its own nature.

Bailey on the Soul, i. 349.

IMPERDIBILITY. n. s. [from imperdibile.] State or quality of being imperdible.

Derham somewhere uses it in his Physico-Theology.

IMPERDIBLE. adj. [imperditus, Lat.] Not to be destroyed, or lost.

As they are harder in their acquisition, so are they more imperdible and steady in their stay.

Fetham, Sermon on Eccl. vi. 11.

3 1

IMPERFECT. adj. [imparfait, Fr.; imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state, Which, since his coming forth, in thought, Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger

That his return was most required. Shakespeare.
Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Bl. Johnson.

The middle action which produces imperfect bodies, is fully called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or inconception, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of motors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks.

Divers things we agree to be knowledge, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcer is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumption.

The still-born sounds upon the pale blue wings, And died imperfect on the falling tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good; as, our best worship is imperfect.

To IMPERFECT. v. o. [from the adjective.] To make imperfect. Not in use.

Time, which perfects some things, imperfects also others. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 28.

IMPERFECTION. n. s. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral, whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfection; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, prove oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Banquo, a woman for many imperfections intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayward.

Imperfections would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfections than virtues. Addison, Spect.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfection in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Maria's love might justify your stay; Imperfection the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made. Shelley.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

IMPERFECTNESS. n. s. [from imperfect.] Failure; defect.

The obscurity of things, and the imperfection of our finite understandings. Manningham, Disc. (1681), p. 70.

Their authority, joined to the knowledge of my own imperfection in the language, over-ruled me. Pope, Lett. to Mr. Bridger, cited by Dr. Warburton.

IMPERFORABLE. adj. [in and perforo, Lat.] Not to be bored through.

IMPERFORATE. adj. [in and perforatus, Lat.] Not pierced through: without a hole.

Sometimes children are born imperforate; in which case a small puncture, dressed with a tent, effects the cure. Sharp.

IMPERFORATED. adj. Closed up. It happeneth sometimes in imperforated persons. Brown, Vulg. Err. viii. 6.

2. Powerful; ascendant; overbearing.

A man, by a vast and imperiuous mind, and a heart large as the sand upon the sea shore, could command all the knowledge of nature and art. Tillotson.

IMPERIOUSLY. adv. [from imperiuous.] With arrogance of command; with insolence of authority.

Who's there, that knocketh so imperiuously? Shakespeare.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, six whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a cure, imperiuously obtruded upon God and his church. Br. Hook.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiuously, that procures an esteem from any one. South.

The sage, transported at the approaching hour, Imperiuously thrice shudder'd on the floor! Locke.

Garth, Dispensary.

IMPERIOUSNESS. n. s. [from imperiuous.] 1. Authority; air of command.

So would he use his imperiuousness, that we had a delightful fear and awe, which made us loth to lose our hopes. Bidney.

2. Arrogance of command.

Imperiuousness and severity is but an ill way of treating men, who have reason of their own to guide them. Locke.

IMPERISHABLE. adj. [imperiashable, Fr. in and perish.] Not to be destroyed.

Devotion offers to transfigure our affections, from their impure and passive shapes, into immaculate and imperiashable forms; and raise them up from infirmity to virtue; and make those desires, which have been the image of terrestrial figures, to bear only that of the celestial.

W. Montague, Dev. Ex. P. I. (1648), p. 37.

We find this our imperiashable form Incapable of mortal injury.

Imperiashable; and though pierc'd with wound, Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd. Milton, P. L.

IMPERIVIGOROUS. adj. [imperiuvigorous, Fr.] Wearing a periwig. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. See To PERIWIG.

IMPERMANENCE. n. s. [in and permanere.] IMPERMANENCY. n. s. [same.] Want of duration; instability.

Distilling, out of the serious contemplation of the mutability of all worldly happiness, a remedy against the evil of that feebleness and impermanency. W. Montague, Dev. Ex. P. I. (1648), p. 56.

Concerning the impermeability of glass by electricity. Philos. Transact. vol. 51, p. 318.

IMPERMEABLE. adj. [in and permeable.] That may not be passed through.

Lands that have a retentive or impermeable soil, should be differently constituted from those that have one less retentive or more permeable. Kirwan, on Minerals, p. 54.

IMPERSONAL, adj. [impersonal, Fr. impersonalis, Lat.] Not varied according to the persons.

Impersonals be declined throughout all moods and tenses; a verb impersonal hath no nominative case before it. Accidence.

IMPERSONALITY, n. s. [in and personal]. Indistinction of personality.

Junius is pleased to tell me, that he addresses himself to me personally. I shall be glad to see him. It is his impersonality that I complain of. Sir W. Draper, Junius's Letts. Woodfall's edit. l. 38.

IMPERSONALLY, adv. [from impersonal]. According to the manner of an impersonal verb.

TO IMPERSONATE, v. a. [from personate]. To personify.

The Egyptians, who impersonated nature, had made her a distinct principle, and even deified her under the name of Isis. Dr. Berkeley, Siris, s. 268.

The masques and pageantries of the age of Elizabeth were not only furnished by the lewdness of the times, but often by the virtues and vices personated. Warren, Hist. E. P. iii. 498.

Some of these masques were moral dramas, where the virtues and vices were impersonated.

Hurd, Dial.

IMPERSPICUITY, n. s. [in and perspicuity]. Want of clearness or perspicuity.

Either very long, or very short, periods are subject to obscurity; one not opening and spreading the matter enough; the other overburdening the auditor's memory. Yet whims will not lose the acuteness and elegance in the one, or suffer the dissembling in the other, must in some things baffle the impercipuity of style.

Instructions for Orators, (Ost, 1682), p. 98.

IMPERSPICUOUS, adj. [in and perspicuous]. Wanting clearness. Bayley.

IMPERSUASIBLE, adj. [in and persuasibility, Lat.] Not to be moved by persuasion.

Every pious person ought to be a Noah, a preacher of righteousness; and if it be his fortune to have as impersuadable an auditor, if he cannot avert the deluge, it will yet deliver his own soul, if he cannot benefit other men's. Dec. of Piety.

IMPERTINENCE, n. s. [impertinent, Fr.; impertinence, It.].

1. That which is of no present weight; that which has no relation to the matter in hand; something not belonging to the subject.

Some thought they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences. Bacon.

O, matter and impertinency mix'd, Reason and madness! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Troublesome; intrusion.
It will be said I handle an air no way useful to my employments or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency.

Wotton on Architecture.

Of pedants, who affect to talk in a language not to be understood. Swift.

3. Trifle; thing of no value.

I envy your felicity, delivered from the gilded impertinences of life, to enjoy the moments of a solid contentment. Swift.

Nothing is more easy than to represent as impertinences any parts of learning, that have no immediate relation to the happiness or convenience of mankind.

Addison.

There are many subtle impertinencies learnt in the schools, and many painful trifles, even among the mathematical theories and problems.

Watts on the Mind.

4. Sauciness; rudeness.

It often happens in public assemblies, that a party who came thither together, or whose impertinence was of an equal pitch, act in concert, and are so full of themselves as to give disturbance to all that are about them. Sometimes you have a set of whisperers, who lay their heads together in order to sacrifice every body within their observation; sometimes a set of laughers, that keep up an impudic mirth in their own corner, and by their noise and gestures show they have no respect for the rest of the company. Spectator, No. 168.

IMPETUOUS, adj. [impetuous, Fr. in and petitus, Lat.].

1. Of no relation to the matter in hand; of no weight.

The law of angels we cannot judge altogether impetuous into the affairs of the church of God. Hosier.

The contemplation of things that are impetuous to us, and do not concern us, are but a more specious idleness. Tillotson.

2. Importunate; intrusive; meddling.

That spear directed by an impetuous malice, which opened his side, though it brought forth blood and mair, caused no dolorous sensation; because the body was then dead. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

3. Foolish; trifling; negligent of the present purpose.

'Tis not a sign two lovers are together, when there can be so impetuous as to enquire what the world does. Pope.

4. Rude; unmannerly.

The ladies, whom you visit, think a wise man the most impetuous creature living; therefore you cannot be offended, that they are displeased with you. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv.

1. A trifter; a meddler; an intruder; one who enquires or interposes where he has no right or call.

Governours would have enough to do to trouble their heads with the politics of every meddling officious impetuous. L'Esrange, Fisk.

2. A rude, unmannerly, or saucy person.
There are another kind of impetuous, which a man is perplexed with in mixed company; and those are your loud speakers. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [from impetuous].

1. Without relation to the present matter.

I call not impetuously to mind, that one of my time had wit enough in Venice to become the civil head of that republic.

Yet more impetuously the Spanish descriptions, remembered before, account their longitude from east to west, utterly against all other geography.

Gregory, Poetum. (1650), p. 370.

These moral virtues — are here brought in by St. Paul, I hope not impetuously, under this head, justice, and continence, and judgement to come. Hammond, Works, iv. 521.

2. Troublesomely; officiously; intrusively.

I have had joy given me as preposterously, and as impetuously, as they give it to men who marry where they do not love. St. J. Suckling.

The blessedness of mortals, none the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impetuously importuned, that great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hosier.

Why will any man be so impetuously officious as to tell me all this is only fancy? If it is a dream, let me enjoy it. Addison.

3. Rudely; saucily.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [in and peturb]. Impossible to be disturbed; incapable of being disturbed.

Ash, from Dict. of Arts.

IMPETURBATION, n. s. [in and peturbatio; Lat. imperturbatio]. Calmness; tranquillity; freedom from perturbation.

In our copying of this equality and imperturbation, we must profess with the Apostle, we have not received the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God.

W. Montague, Dec. Ess. P. I. (1648), p. 292.

To suppose the acquisition of a complete knowledge of all things in this life, of an absolute imperturbation of mind, and constant infallibility, is no less vain. Hen. Warburton, Sermon. (1746), ii. 116.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [in and peturb]. Undisturbed; calm. Bailey.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [impetuous, Lat.].

1. Unpassable; impenetrable.

Least the difficulty of passing back
Stay his return, perhaps, over this gulf
Impassable, impetuous; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world.

Milton, P. I. I.

We may discern discern how close a texture glass is, since so very thin a film proved so impetuous to the air, that it was forced to break the glass to free itself. Huygh.

The cause of reflection is not the impingement of light on the solid or impetuous parts of bodies.

Newton, Opticks.

A great many vessels are, in this state, impetuous by the solid. Arbutnot.

From the damp ether impetuous vapours rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies. Pope.

2. Inaccessible. Perhaps improperly used.

A river's mouth, impetuous to the wind,
And clear of rocks. Pope, Odys.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [from impetuous].

Impetuously; impassably.

IMPETUOUSNESS, n. s. [from impetuous].

The state of not admitting any passage.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [in and peturbatio, Latin]. Impossibility to be passed through.

I willingly declined those many ingenious reasons given by others; as of the imperturbability of eternity, and impossibility therein to attain to the present limit of antecedent ages. Hale.

TO IMPETRE, v. a. [impetrare, Fr.].

To trouble; to harass; to entangle; to incumber; to pester. See TO PESTER.

Catagoras, and Hermod.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [from impetere, Lat.].

Scurry; covered with small scabs.

IMPETUOUSLY, adv. [impetabilis, from impetere, Lat. impetabile, Fr.]. Possible to be obtained.

Dict.

TO IMPETRATE, v. a. [impetrare, Fr. impetere, Latin.]. To obtain by intreaty.

He hath impetrate reconciliation.

Atq. Epist. Later xxi. Life and Letters by

Parr, p. 50.

Impetrating the gift of God, that this penitential satisfaction may be so much blessed, as to restore some value of time thither, where I am to account for so much idle dissipation of it.

W. Montague, Dec. Ess. P. I. Pref.

IMPETRATE, v. a. [from the verb].

Obtained by application or intreaty.

The one might be as easily impetrate as the other. Id. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 327.

IMPETRATION, n. s. [impetration, from impetere, Lat.].

The act of obtaining by prayer or intreaty.

Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the authority, which indeed is excellent, of bishop Jeremy Taylor. But the word appears to have been common; and was also applied formerly to the pre-obtaining from the court of Rome benefices belonging to the king, which was prohibited.

The said cardinal did not know the impetration of the said bulls to have been to the contempt and prejudice of the king, or that it was against any statute.

Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 364.

Application and impetration, in this matter we have in hand, are of equal extent.

Alps. Usher, Letter xxi.

The impetration of some favour.

W. Mountague, Disc. p. i. Prof.

The blessed sacrament is the mystery of the death of Christ, and the application of his blood which was shed for the remission of sins, and is the great means of impetration, and the efficacious cause of it.

Bp. Taylor.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy, and oceans of impetration in this world.

Bp. Taylor.

IMPETRATIVE.* adj. [from impetrare.]

Able to obtain by entreaty.

O Saviour, Thy prayers, which were most perfect and impetrative, are they by which our weak and unworthy prayers receive both life and glory.

Bp. Hall, Contend. B. 4.

IMPETRATORY.* adj. [from impetrare.]

Beseeching; obtaining by intreaty.

Aims are therefore effective to the abolition and pardon of our sins, because they are preparatory to and impetrative of the grace of repentance, and are fruits of repentance.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 5. ch. 2.

IMPETUOSITY. n. s. [from impetuosus, Fr. from impetuous.] Violence; fury; vehemence; force.

I will set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity.

The whole intrigue was contrived by the duke, and so violently pursued by his spirit and impetuosity.

The mind gives out only licence, but incitation to the other passions to take their freest range, and act with the utmost impetuosity.

Dec. of Pity.

IMPETUOUS.* adj. [from impetuosus, Fr. from impetuosus, Latin.] This word Heylin, in 1656, enumerates among the uncouth and uncommon. But see IMPETUOUSLY.

1. Violent; forcible; fierce.

Their virtue, like their Tiber's flood, Rolling its course, design'd their country's good; But off the torrent's too impetuous speed, From the low earth rose some polluted weed.

Prior.

2. Vehement of mind; passionate.

The king 'tis true, is noble, but impetuous.

Rome.

IMPETUOUSLY.* adv. [from impetuosus.]

Violently; vehemently: both of men and things.

Impatient of the wrong, impetuously he raves.

He would be — impetuously wroth, impetuously self-willed.

Bp. Hall, Of Contention, § 32.

They view the windings of the hoary Nar; Through rocks and woods impetuously he glides, While froth and foam the fretting surface hides.

Addison.

IMPETUOUSNESS. n. s. [from impetuosus.]

Violence; fury; vehemence of passion.

I wish all words of rage might vanish in that breath that utters them; as if they resembled the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might in transients.

Decay of Pity.

IMPETUOUS.* n. s. [Latin.] Violent tendency to any point; violent effort.

There is a sort of valour, which naturally springs out of the very crisis and temper of men's bodies; which is nothing else but a certain impetus, or brisk fermentation of the blood and spirits.

Scott, Sermon before the Artillery-Comp. (1680.)

Why did not they continue their descent till they were contiguous in the sun, whether both mutual attraction and impetus carried them?

Bentley, Sermon vii. (1692.)

IMPETUOUS.* adj. [from impetuosus.] Painted; impressed.

His pallid face, impetuously with death,

Spenser, Astrophel.

IMPETUOUS.* n. s. Our old word for impire, which leads us to the Latin etymon, impire, and induces us to discard what

Dr. Johnson, and those whom he has followed, propose as the root of impire.

See EMPIRE. Hulot thus defines the word, in the form now given. " Impier, or impier, a judge or mediator taken to deem a matter debated."

TO IMPERCE.* v. a. [in and perce.] To pierce through; to penetrate. See

TO EMPIRE.

He feels those secret and impiering flames.

Drayton's Ragues, (1604.)

Time may come, when deep impiered stings

Shall prick your heart; and it shall melt with sorrowing.

Mare, Song of the Soul, l. iii. 34.

IMPIEACABLE.* adj. [in and perce.] Impenetrable; not to be pierced.

Exceeding rage impiered the furious beast; —

For never felt his impierable breast

So wondrous force from hand of living might.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPIETY. n. s. [impiété, French; impietas, Latin.]

1. Irreverence to the Supreme Being; contempt of the duties of religion.

To keep that oath were more impier

Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

Shakespeare.

2. An act of wickedness; expression of irreligion. In this sense it has a plural.

If they die unpunished, no more is the king guilty of those impieries for which they are now visited.

Shakespeare.

Can Juno such impieries approve? Demetrius.

We have a melancholy prospect of the state of our religion; such amazing impieries can be equalled by nothing but by those cities consumed of old by fire.

Swift.

TO IMPIGNORATE. v. a. [in and pinus, Latin.] To pawn; to pledge.

IMPIGNORATION. n. s. [from impignoro.] The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

TO IMPIGNE. v. n. [impingo, Latin.] To fall against; to strike against; to clash with.

Things are reserved in the memory by some corporeal figure and material images, which, having impiered on the common sense, rebound thence into some vacant cells of the brain.

Glauville, Scipias.

The cause of reflexion is not the impiering of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies.

Newton, Opticks.

TO IMPIGULATE. v. a. [in and pinguis, Latin.] To fatten; to make fat.

Frictions also do more fill and impieruate the body than exercise; for that in frictions the inward parts are at rest.

Bacon.

IMPIOUS. adj. [impius, Latin.] Irreligious; wicked; profane; without reverence of religion.

That Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stand to direct, but let it pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think.

Hobbes.

Come then this impious rage.

Milton, P. L.

Then leav'd Auchincloss he laid in dust,

Who stain'd his sepulchre's bed with impious lust.

Dryden.

And impious nations fear'd eternal night.

Dryden.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious.

South.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway, The post of honour is a private station.

Addison.

Since after there may rise an impious line, Course mangle of the human face divine;

Paint on, till face be dyed by mortal pain

And live and die the monarch of thy art.

Tickell.

They, impious, dar'd to prey

On beads devoted to the god of day.

Grand mistakes in religion proceed from taking literally what was meant figuratively, from which several impious absurdities followed, terminating in infidelity.

Forbes.

IMPIOUSLY. adv. [from impious.] Profanely; wickedly.

The Roman wit, who impiously divides

His hero and his gods to different sides,

I would condemn.

Grannille.

IMPIOUSNESS. n. s. [from impious.] Contempt of the duties of religion.

Men — even by nature are taught to hope of another life, from which neither ignorance nor impiousness can drive them.

Sir W. Cornwallis, Disc. on Seneca.

IMPLACABILITY.* n. s. [from implacabile.]

Inexorableness; irreconcilable enmity; unappeasable malice.

What calamity happened to that most noble city of Rome by the implacability, or wrath insatiable, of these two captives?

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 101.

The powder project — with fury and implacability came to be resolved on by a pack of boot-faces.

Proceedings against Cornet, (1606) D. 2.

IMPLACABLE.* adj. [implacabilis, Lat. implacabile, Fr.]

1. Not to be pacified; inexorable; malicious; constant in enmity.

His inclement is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Danah bears a generous mind;

But to implacable revenge incline'd;

A bounteous master, but a deadly foe.

Dryden.

The French are the most implacable and the most dangerous enemies of the British nation.

Addison.

2. Admitting no relief or ease; not to be assuaged. Dr. Johnson overpasses this sense.

O how I burne with implacable fury!

Spenser, F. Q. li. vi. 44.

With scorching heat of implacable fire.

Brewer, Com. de Lingua, p. 15.

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd it in and bru'd it.

Into their substance pent, which wrought them pain

Implacable, and many a dolorous groan.

Milton, P. L.

IMPLACABLENESS.* n. s. [from implacabile.]

The state of being implacable.

Little as the archangel gained upon them by his priestly implacableness, the king gained much less by his priestly condescensions.

Bp. Parker, Reply to the Bishops. Trans. (1675), p. 363.

IMPLACABLY. adv. [from implacable.]

1. With malice not to be pacified; inexorably.

An error was made for dismissing all the papists; upon which, though nothing was after done, yet it kept up the apprehensions to the people of dangers, and disinclined them from the queen, whom they began every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

Clarendon.

2. It is once used by Dryden in a kind of mixed sense of a tyrant's love.

I love,

And 'tis below my greatness to disown it;

Love thee implacably, yet late thee too. Dryden.

To IMPLANT. v. a. [in and planto, Lat.]

To infix; to insert; to place; to engraft; to settle; to set; to sow. The original meaning of putting a vegetable into the ground to grow is not often used.

How can you him unworship the decree,

In whose chief part your worships implanted be?

Sidney.

See, Father! what first-fruits on earth are sprung,

From thy implanted grace in man! Milton, P. L.

No need of public sacrosanctions this bind,

Which Nature has implanted in the mind.

Dryden.

There grew to the outside of the arytenoides

another cartilage, capable of motion, by the help of some muscles that were implanted in it. Ray.

God, having endowed man with faculties of knowledge, was no more obliged to implant those innate notions in his mind than that, having given him reason, hands, and materials, he should build him bridges. Locke.

IMPLANTATION. n. s. [implantation, Fr.

from implant.] The act of setting or planting; the act of enfixing or settling.

This [to] more especially by the expressed way of intision or implantation.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 46.

IMPLAUSIBLE adj. [in and plausibilis.]

Not spacious; not likely to seduce or persuade.

So improbable, so implausible means for accomplishing so great effects. Barrow, Works, l. 343.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

IMPLAUSIBLY. adv. [from implausible.]

Without show of probability.

To IMPLEACH. v. a. [from pleach.] To interweave. See To PLEACH.

These talents of their hair,

With twisted aërial amorously implench'd,

I have receiv'd from many a several fair.

Shakespeare, Love's Complaint.

To IMPLEAD. v. a. [old Fr. impleader.]

To EMPLEAD. To accuse; to indict.

The honour of God seemeth violated by these inventions, since even the law of God is said to be impleaded by such assertions. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. l. p. 127.

Righteousness to a judicial sense imports as much as a legal discharge, whereby the person

impleaded becomes right in the court, or righteous.

Norris, on the Beatitudes, p. 91.

IMPLEADER. n. s. [from to implead.]

An accuser; one who indicts another.

Ye envious and deadly malicious, ye impleaders

and action-threateners, how long shall the Lord suffer you in his house, in which dwelleth nothing but peace and charity? Herman, Transl. of Bress's Sermon, (1587), p. 176.

The Gombette law, which was instituted by Gondebald, king of Burgundy in the year 501, allowed the expedient of duelling to those impleaders, whose the administered oath to offenders did not sufficiently satisfy for an obtaining of their resigned and voluntary acquiescence from the cause complained of. Hist. of Duelling, p. 3.

IMPLEASING. adj. [in and please.] Not pleasing; disagreeable.

A melancholy man is a stranger from the dove; one that nature made sociable, because she made him man; and a crazed disposition hath altered; implying to all, as all to him.

Overbury, Character. (ed. 1627), sign. G. 5. h.

To IMPLEDGE. v. a. [from pledge.] To gage; to pawn. Sherwood.

IMPLEMENT. n. s. [implementum, from

impleo, Latin.]

1. Something that fills up vacancy, or supplies wants.

Unto life many implements are necessary; more,

if we seek such a life as hath in joy, comfort, delight, and pleasure. Hooker.

2. Instrument of manufacture; tools of a trade; vessels of a kitchen.

Wood hath coined seventeen thousands pounds, and hath his tools and implements to coin six times

as much. Swift.

It is the practice of the eastern regions for the artists in metals to carry about with them the whole implements of trade to the house where they find employment. Brown.

IMPLETION. n. s. [impleo, Lat.] The act of filling; the state of being full.

Theophrastus conceiveth, upon a plentiful increase, they may succeed a disruption of the matrix. Brown.

IMPLEX. adj. [implexus, Latin.] Intricate; entangled; complicated; opposed to simple.

Every poem is, according to Aristotle's division, either simple or implex: it is called simple

when there is no change of fortune in it; implex, when the fortune of the chief actor changes from bad to good, or from good to bad.

Addison, Spect. No. 297.

To IMPLICATE. v. a. [implicare, Fr.

implico, Latin. "Provided that he ex-temple not himself with them, implicetur,

implicatur." Abp. Laud's Answ. to Lord

Say.] To entangle; to embarrass; to involve; to infold.

The ingredients of saltpetre do so mutually implicate and bind each other, that the concrete acts but very languidly. Bogle.

IMPLICATION. n. s. [implicatio, Lat. impli- cation, French, from implicare.]

1. Involution; entanglement.

Three principal causes of firmness are the grow-ness, the quiet contact, and the implication of the component parts. Bogle.

2. Inference not expressed, but tacitly inculcated.

Though civil causes, according to some men,

are of less moment than criminal, yet the doctors are, by implication, of a different opinion.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPLICATIVE. adj. [from to implicate.]

Having implication.

IMPLICATIVELY. adv. [from implicative.]

By implication.

In revealing the confession of these men, it is implicitly granted, their fault was not then to be punished, and so it appears no fault.

Sir T. Bole, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646), p. 102.

Virtually and implicitly, and by necessary consequence, it takes away clergy from the principal to all those cases, where it takes it from the accusatory before. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 49. V. sect. 2.

IMPLICIT. adj. [implicit, Fr. implicitus, Latin.]

1. Entangled; infolded; complicated. This sense is rare. Dr. Johnson says, citing two examples of the word which he ascribes to Pope and Thomson; the latter of which belongs to Milton, and not to Thomson. The sense of "wrapped up," is what our old lexicography assigns to implicit. See Bulokar's Expositor, edit. 1656.

The humble shrub,

And bush with frizled hair implicit.

Milton, P. L. vii. 363.

Many of them [periods] together, if without connections, are but implicit argumentation at best.

Instruct. for Oratory, Oxf. (1689), p. 57.

In his woolly fleece

I cling implicit. Pope.

2. Inferred; tacitly comprised; not expressed.

In the first establishments of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such and such words should be signs, whereby they would express their thoughts to another. South.

Our express requests are not granted, but the implicit desires of our hearts are fulfilled.

Smolridge.

3. Resting upon another; connected with another over which that which is con-connected to it has no power; trusting without reserve or examination. Thus, by implicit credulity, I may believe a letter yet not opened, when I am confident of the writer's veracity.

That the false peace or union, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance; for all colours will agree in the dark. Bacon.

No longer by implicit faith we err,

Whilst every man's his own interpreter. Dennham.

IMPLICITLY. adv. [from implicit.]

1. By inference comprised, though not expressed.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence: he may acknowledge what he will with his mouth, but in his heart he hath said there is no God. Bentley.

2. By connection with something else;

dependently; with unreserved confidence or obedience.

My blushing muse with conscious fear retires,

And whom they like, implicitly admires. Racine, mon.

Learn not to dispute the methods of his providence; but humbly and implicitly to acquiesce

in and adore them. Atterbury.

We implicitly follow in the track in which they lead us, and comfort ourselves with this poor reflection, that we shall fare as well as those that go before us. Reger.

IMPLICITNESS. n. s. [from implicit.] The state of being implicit; implication; dependence on the judgement or autho-riety of another. Scott.

IMPLICITLY. n. s. [implicit, Fr. from im-

PLICIT.] Entanglement; incurance; obscure involution. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPLICITLY. adv. [from the participle

implicit.] By inference comprised, though not expressed; by implication.

These informers, in this frontispiece before their several suggestions, impudently undertake to make good three assertions.

IMPLORATION.* n. s. [old French, imploration; from implorare.] Solicitation; supplication.

This imploration and worship is holy.

Bp. Hall, Henry, p. 250.

The three points, wherein they did pretend to have prevented his majesty's former imploration of their concurrence.

See H. Watson, Dispatch in 1622, Rem. p. 541.

TO IMPLORER. v. a. [importer, Fr. implorare, Lat.]

1. To call upon in supplication; to solicit.

They ship their cars, and crown with wise

The holy goblet to the pow'r divine,
Imploring all the gods that reign above.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To ask; to beg.

Do not say 'tis superstition, that

I kneel, and thus implore her blessing.

Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

IMPLORER, *n. s. [from the verb.] The act of begging; intreaty; solicitation. Not in use.

Urged sore

With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPLORER, *n. s. [from implorare.] Solicitor. This is an old substantive; for it occurs in Sherwood's dictionary; but not in Shakespeare's Hamlet, as cited by Dr. Johnson; the true word there being importator; a word not likely to be revived.

IMPLUMED, *adj. [implumis, Lat. Without feathers. Dict.

IMPLUMOUS.* adj. [implumis, Latin.] Naked of feathers.

Johnson in V. Unfeathered.

TO IMPLUNGE.* v. a. [from plunge.] To plunge; to hurry into. See TO EMPLUNGE.

He implunged himself in much just hatred for his unjust dealing.

Fallax, Italy War, p. 22.

Detestable crimes, which we find the wicked have often been implunging into. Hesperi, Seren. p. 10.

TO IMPLY.* v. a. [impliquer, French; implicare, Latin.]

1. To infer; to cover; to entangle. Not in use.

His courage stout,
Striving to lose the knot that fast his ties,
Himself in straighter bonds too rash implies.

Spenser, F. Q.

And Phœbus flying so most shameful night,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To involve or comprise as a consequence or concomitant.

That it was to use among the Greeks, the word implicare implicare.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

What follows next is no objection; for that implies a fault.

Shakespeare.

Shows the strength of brawny arms implies,
Emblems of valour, and of victory.

Dryden.

Where a malicious act is proved, a malicious intention is implied.

TO IMPOCKET.* v. a. [from pocket; Fr. empocher.] To put into the pocket.

The vulgar sort stood staring with their hands impocketed.

Carleton's Memoirs, p. 57.

TO IMPOISON.* v. a. [empoisonner, Fr. It might be written empoison, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed it abundantly is. See TO EMPOISON.]

1. To kill with poison.

A man by his own alma impoison'd,
And with his charity slain.

Shakespeare.

2. To corrupt with poison.

One doth not know

How much an ill word doth impoison liking.

Shakespeare.

IMPOISONMENT.* n. s. [from impoison.] Act of poisoning; state of being poisoned. See EMPOISONMENT.

The publick is already acquainted with the manner of Mr. Curll's impoisonment.

Pope, Dydor, Condit. of E. Curll.

IMPO'LARLY, *adv. [in and polar.] Not according to the direction of the poles.

Little used.

Being impolarly adjoined unto a more vigorous location, it will, to a short time, exchange its poles.

Brown.

IMPO'LCY.* n. s. [in and policy.] Imprudence; indiscretion; want of forecast.

The schemes of Providence and nature are too deeply laid to be overthrown by man's impolicy.

By, Herby, Seren. (1795).

IMPOLISHED.* adj. [in and polished, Lat. impolitus.] Unpolished; rude.

The lofty phrase—could not be followed nor sufficiently expressed in our rude and impolished English language.

T. Hudson, Dedic. of his Hist. of Judah, 1691.

IMPOLITE.* adj. [in and polite.] Not polite; rude.

I never saw such impolite confusion at any country wedding in Britain.

Drummond, Trav. (Lett. 3. 1744), p. 76.

IMPOLITENESS.* n. s. [from impolite.] Want of politeness.

The impoliteness of his manners seemed to attract.

Ed. Chesterfield, Chester.

IMPOLITICAL.* adj. [in and political.] IMPOLITICK.* adj. [imprudent; indiscreet; void of art or forecast.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolitical; but rather to use all prudent foresight and circumspection, lest our simplicity be over-reach'd by cunning slight.

Hosier.

IMPOLITICALLY.* adv. [in and political.] IMPOLITICKLY.* adv. [Without art or forecast.

In the pursuit of their own reasonings, they do it so impolitically. Bacon, Report in Part 5. Jac.

IMPO'NDEROUS, *adj. [in and ponderous.] Void of perceptible weight.

It produces visible and real effects by imponderous and invisible emissions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO IMPOR.* v. a. [from poor.] To make poor.

Neither waves, nor thieves, nor fire,

Nor have rote import'd this sire.

W. Browne, Shep. Pipe, Egl. iii.

IMPO'RSITY, *n. s. [in and porous.] Absence of interstices; compactness; closeness.

The porosity or imporsity betwixt the tangible parts, and the greatness or smallness of the pores.

Bacon.

IMPO'ROUS, *adj. [in and porous.] Free from pores; free from vacuities or interstices; close of texture; completely solid.

It has its earthly and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discredited by atonical terminations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

If atoms should descend plumb down with equal velocity, they all perfectly solid and imporous, they would never the one overtake the other. Bay on the Creation.

TO IMPORT, *v. a. [importo, Lat.]

1. To carry into any country from abroad; opposed to export.

For Ellis I would sail with utmost speed,
To import twelve mares, which thence luxurious feed.

Pope.

2. To imply; to infer.

Himself not only comprehended all our necessities, but in such sort also framed every petition as might most naturally serve for many; and doth, though not always require, yet always import a multitude of speakers together. Hosier.
The name of discipline importeth not as they would fain have it construed; but the self same thing it signifieth, which the name of doctrine doth. Hosier.

This question we now asked, imported, as that we thought this land a land of magicians. Bacon.

3. To produce in consequence.

Something he left imperfect in the state, Which since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his return was most requir'd.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. [Importer, importre, French, Importersonally.] To be of moment; as, it imports, it is of weight or consequence.

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious

Imports thee to know, this bene.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let the heat be such as may keep the metal perpetually molten; for that above all importeth to the work.

Bacon.

Number in armies importeth not much, where the people is of weak courage. Shakespeare, Titus.

To this attain, whether heaven move, or earth, Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton, P. L.

It may import us in this calm to hearken more than we have done to the storms that are now rising about us. Trapp.

If I endure it, what imports it you? Dryden.

IMPOR'T, *n. s. [from the verb. Formerly the accent was constant on the last syllable of this word; in modern times, frequently on the first syllable, and certainly always so in the third meaning.]

1. Importance; moment; consequence.

What occasion of import

Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife?

Shakespeare.

Some business of import that triumph wears
You seem to go with. Dryden, and L., Edipus.

When there is any dispute, the judge ought to appoint the sum according to the eloquence and ability of the advocate, and in proportion to the import of the cause. Argill.

2. Tendency.

Add to the former observations made about vegetables a third of the same import made in mineral substances. Hogel.

5. Any thing brought from abroad; as, our imports ought not to exceed our exports.

What foreign imports may be necessary for clothing? Bp. Berkeley, Quæst. 1. 171.

IMPOR'TABLE.* adj. [old French, importable.] Unsupportable; not to be endured.

A word accented by Spenser, from whose Fairy Queen Dr. Johnson gives the solitary example of it, on the first syllable. The poetical licence of Spenser is not to be followed, and the word is very common in our language.

Dr. Johnson barely refers to the Apocrypha for its existence, without the citation.

That importable burden. Chaucer, Tent. of Love.
His paines were importable.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale.
Beware of the importable burdens of the high-mynded philosophers.

With hideous strokes and importable perns.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 55.
Thine angry threatening towards sinners is im-portable.

Prayer of Massius, Pref. to the Books of Massius.
The tempest would be importable, if it beat always upon him from all sides.

Life of Fermín, p. 80.

IMPORTANCE. n. s. [French.]

1. Thing imported or implied. Rare.

A notable passion of wonder appeared in them;
but the wisest beloyed that knew no more but sawing, could not say if the importance were joy or sorrow. Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

2. Matter; subject. Not in use.

It had been joy you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then each bore, upon importance of so slight a nature. Shakespeare, Cymb.

3. Consequence; moment.

We consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turks. Shakespeare, Othello.

Thy own importance know,
Nor bound thy narrow views to things below. Pope.

4. Importance. An improper use peculiar to Shakespeare.

Maria writ
The letter at eye Toby's great importance;
In recompence whereof he hath married her. Shakespeare.

IMPORTANT. adj. [important, Fr.]

1. Momentous; weighty; of great consequence.

The most important and pressing care of a new and vigorous king was his marriage, for moderate establishment of the royal line. Warton.

This superadds treachery to the crime: 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Deacy of Piety.

O then, what interest shall I make
To have my last important stake
When the most just have cause to quake. Racine.

The great important end that God designs religion for, the government of mankind, sufficiently shows the necessity of its being rooted deep in the heart, and put beyond the danger of being torn up by any ordinary violence. South.

Examine how the fashionable practice of the world can be reconciled to the important doctrine of our religion. Rogers.

Important truths will let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Grayville.

The important hour hath pass'd unheeded by.
Frederic.

2. Momentous; forcible; of great efficacy.

This seems to be the meaning here.
He fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal value counter-sail'd. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Important. A corrupt use of the word. See IMPORTANCE.

Great France
My mourning and important tears hath pited.
Shakespeare.

IMPORTANTLY. adv. [from important.]

Weightily; forcibly.
This more importantly concerns us.
Hammond, Works, iv. 592.

IMPORTATION.† n. s. [from import.]

1. The act or practice of importing, or bringing into a country from abroad;
opposed to exportation.

The king's reasonable profit should not be neglected upon importation and exportation. Bacon.

These mines fill the country with greater numbers of people than it would be able to lose, without the importation of corn from foreign parts.

The emperor has forbidden the importation of their manufactures into any part of the empire. Addition to Italy.

Addition to Italy.

2. Simply, conveyance.

The instruments of the vital faculty, which serve for importation and reception of the blood and spirits. Smith on Old Age, p. 239.

IMPORTER. n. s. [from import.] One that brings in from abroad.

It is impossible to limit the quantity that shall be brought in, especially if the importers of it have so sure a market as the Exchequer. Swift.

IMPORTLESS. adj. [from import.] Of no moment or consequence. This is a word not in use, but not inelegant.

We lose expect
That matter needless, of importless burthen,
Divide thy lips. Shakespeare.

IMPORTUNACY. n. s. [from importunate.]

The act of importuning.
Am thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunacy? Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

The multitude of suits, the confluence
Of suitors; then, their importunacies? B. Jonson, Sejanus.

She would have by this time acquainted you with my importunacy. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir, iv. 7.

IMPORTUNATE.† adj. [importunus,
Lat. importune, Fr.]

1. Unseasonable and incessant in solicitations; not to be repulsed.

I was in debt in my importunate business; but he would not bear my excuse. Shakespeare.

They may not be able to bear the clamour of so importunate suitors. Smollett.

A rule restrains the most importunate importu-ness of our nature. Rogers.

2. Troublesome; not easy to be borne.
[importunus, Lat.] Obsolete.

Behold you, how to the importunate accidents of this human life all the world is exposed.
Deane, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 142.

IMPORTUNATELY. adv. [from importunate.]
With incessant solicitation; pertinaciously in petition.

Their pertinacy is such, that when you drive them out of one form, they assume another; and are so importunately troublesome, as makes many think it impossible to be freed from them. Durpa, Rules of Devotion.

IMPORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from importunate.] Incessant solicitation.

She with more and more importunateness craved, which, in all good manners, was either of us to be desired, or not granted. Sedley.

IMPORTUNATOR. n. s. [from importu-nate.] An incessant solicitor, or de-mander.

Abusers and dispensers against the law of God, but tyrannous importunators and exactors of their own. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

TO IMPORTUNE.† v. a. [importuner, Fr. importune, Lat.] Accented anciently on the second syllable.]

1. To tease; to harass with slight vexation perpetually recurring; to molest;
to disturb by reiteration of the same request; to solicit earnestly.

They cry and call to leave space,
With prayers loud importuning the sky. Spenser, Colin Clout.

Against all sense you do importune her. Shaks.
If he espied any lewd gait in his fellow-servants, his master should straightways know it, and not rest free from importuning, until the fellow had put away his fault. Greene.

The highest saint to the celestial hierarchy began to be so importunately importuned, that a great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hovell, Foe. For.

There with my crying importune Heaven. Milton, P. L.

The bloom of beauty other years demands,
Nor will be gather'd by such wither'd hands:
You importune it with a false desire. Dryden.

Every one hath experienced this troublesome intrusion of some striking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being employed. Locke.

We have been obliged to hire troops from several princes of the empire, whose ministers and civilians have perpetually importuned the court with unreasonable demands. Swift.

2. To require; to render necessary.

We shall write to you
As time and our concerns shall importune,
How it goes with us. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

3. To importune; to foretell. Not proper.

The sage wisard tells, as he has read,
That it importune death and doleful dyedread. Spenser, F. Q.

IMPORTUNE.† adj. [importunus, old French, importunus, Lat.] Was anciently pronounced with the accent on the second syllable.]

1. Constantly recurring; troublesome by frequency.

All that charge did formerly apply,
With greedy malice and importune toll;
And planted there their huge artillery,
With which they daily made most dreadful battles. Spenser, F. Q.

Henry, king of England, needed not to have bestowed such great sums, nor so to have busied himself with importune and incessant labour, to compensate my death and ruin, if I had been a feigned person. Bacon, Hist. VII.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

He is spiteful with his fortune,
And for he will be importune
Unto our wight, we coereuse. Chaucer, Rem. R. 5639.

And th' armies of their creatures all, and some Do serve to them, and with importune might War against us, the rivals of their will. Spenser.

If the upper soul can catch what is consuetud-to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope, that after a few years of sensuality, that importune rebellious servant shall be eternally rust off, this would be some colour for that novel persuasion. Hammond.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune. Glanville, Scrupus.

Certainly the just God cannot be so importune and unreasonable a master, as to enjoin us what is physically impossible, to expect to reap where he has not sown, to require bricks without allowance of straw. Bentley, Serm. ix.

3. Unseasonable; coming, asking, or happening at a wrong time.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second? which compell'd
Me thus, though important perhaps, to come
And gaze and worship thee. Milton, P. L.
4. Cruel; inexorable. [important, Lat.]
The stroke of death is important, and can not be toyed. Hp. Fisher, Pk p. 93.
They did lament his lawless state,
And often blame the too important fate.

Spenser, F. Q. I. xii. 16.
IMPORTUNELY, adv. [from importune.]
1. Troublesomely; incessantly.

The palmer bent his ear unto the noise,
To weet who called so importunately;
Again he heard a more importuned voice,
That bade him come in haste. Spenser, F. Q.
2. Unseasonably; improperly.

The constutions that the apostles made concerning deacons and widows, are, with much importunity, but very importantly urged by the disciplinarians. Sunderland.

IMPORTUNER, n. s. [from importune.]
One who is importunate.
Preclude your care against all rash, rude, irrational, innovating importuners.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Leara. (1653.) p. 187.
IMPORTUNITY, n. s. [importunitas, Lat. importunité, Fr. from importunate.] Incessant solicitation.

Overcome with the importunity of his wife, a woman of a haughty spirit, he altered his former purpose. Knox.

Thrice I deluded her, and turn'd to sport
Her importunity. Milton, S. A.

IMPORTABLE, adj. [from import.] To be laid as obligatory on any body.

They were not simply importable on any particular man, farther than he was a member of some church. Hammond.

TO IMPOSE, v. a. [imposcer, Fr. imposi- sum, Lat.]

1. To lay on as a burthen or penalty.
It shall not be lawful to impose toll upon them.

If a son do fall into a lewd action, the imposi- tion, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakespeare.

To tyrants others have their country sold,
Imposing foreign lords for foreign gold.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose Thy plagues, and curse them with such ills as those. Pope.

2. To enjoin as a duty or law.
What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep?
Hoad.

There was a thorough way made by the sword for the imposing of the laws upon them.

Spenser on Ireland.
Thus on the deep imposed nobler laws,
And by that justice hath remov'd the cause.

Christianity hath hardly imposed any other laws upon us, but what are enacted in our natures, or are agreeable to the prime and fundamental laws of this world. Tillotson.

Impose but your commands,
This hour shall bring you twenty thousand hands.

Dryden.
It was neither imposed on me, nor so much as the subject given me by any man. Dryden.

3. To fix on; to impute to.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that to the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature, we impute unto nativity itself. Brown.

4. To obtrude faciously.

Our poet thinks not fit

To impose upon you what he writes for wit. Dryden.

5. TO IMPOSE ON. To put a cheat on; to deceive.

Physicians and philosophers have suffered themselves to be so far imposed upon as to publish chymical experiments, which they never tried.

Hag.
He that thinks the name centaur stands for some real being, imposes on himself, and mistakes words for things. Locke.

6. [Among printers.] To put the pages on the stone, and fit on the chase, in order to carry the form to press.

IMPOSE, n. [from the verb.] Command; injunction. Not in use.

According to your ladyship's impose,
I am thus early come. Shakespeare.

IMPOSEMENT, n. s. [from impose.]

1. One who enjoins as a law; one who lays any thing on another as a hardship.
The universities' sufferings might be manifested to all nations, and the imposers of these ills might repent. Warton.

2. One who places or puts on.

The coronary thorns did not only express the scorn of the imposers, by that figure into which they were contrived; but did also pierce his tender and sacred temples to a multiplicity of pains, by their numerous acuminations. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

IMPOSITION, n. s. [imposition, French;
impositus, Latin.]

1. The act of laying any thing on another.
The second part of confirmation is the prayer and benediction of the bishop, made more solemn by the imposition of hands. Hammond.

2. The act of annexing.
The first imposition of names was grounded, among all nations, upon future good hope conceived of children. Cicero.

The imposition of the name is grounded only upon the predominancy of that element, whose name is ascribed to it. Begh.

3. Injunction of any thing as a law or duty.

Their determination is to trouble you with no more ills; unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets. Shakespeare.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

Milton, P. L.

4. Constraint; oppression.
The constraint of receiving and holding opinion
by authority was rightly called imposition. Locke.
A greater load has been laid on us than we have been able to bear, and the grossest impositions have been submitted to, in order to forward the dangerous designs of a faction. Swift.
Let it not be made, contrary to its own nature,
the occasion of strife, a narrow spirit, and unreasonable impositions on the mind and practice.

Watts on the Mind.

5. Cheat; fallacy; imposture.

It was therefore determined that we should dispose of the horse at the neighbouring fair; and,
to prevent imposition, that I should go with him myself. Goldsmith, Vir. of Wakefield, l. 14.

6. A supererogatory exercise enjoined scholars as a punishment.

Impositions were supply'd.

To light my pipe, or smooth my pipe.

Warren, Progress of Discontent.

IMPOSSIBLE, adj. [impossibile, Fr. in and possible.] Not to be done; not to be attained; impracticable.

It was impossible that the state should continue quiet. 2 Mac.

With men this is impossible; but with God, all things are possible. St. Matt. xiv. 36.

Twere impossible for any enterprise to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it. Decry of Poetry.

Difficult it is, but not impossible. Chillingworth.

It is impossible the mind should be stopped any where in its progress in this space, how far soever it extends its thoughts. Locke.

We cannot believe it impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things than five. Locke.

I my thoughts deceive
With hope of things impossible to God. Wah.

IMPOSSIBLE, n. s. An impossibility.

To be in aught impossible there.

That will be well an impossible were.

Chaucer, Tr. and Crest. lib. 396.

I credit less
Thao witches, which impossible confound.

Donne, Poems, p. 71.

IMPOSSIBLITY, n. s. [impossibilité, Fr. from impossible.]

1. Impracticability; the state of being not feasible.

Simple Philotes, it is the impossibility that doth torment me; for unlawful desires are punished after the effect of enjoying, but impossible desires in the desire itself. Sir George.

Admit all these impossibilities and great abundities to be possible and convenient. Whitef.

Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun,
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work. Shakespeare, Coriol.

They confound difficulty with impossibility.

Those who assert the impossibility of space resisting without matter, must make body infinite.

When we see a man of like passions and weakness with ourselves going before us in the paths of duty, it confutes all lazy pretences of impossibility.

Rogers.

2. That which cannot be done.

Though men do, without offence, wish daily that the affairs, which with evil success are passing, might have fallen out much better; yet to pray that they may have been any other than they are,
this being a manifest impossibility in itself, the rules of religion do not permit.

Hoad.
Impossibilities! oh no, there's none,
Could I bring thy heart captive home. Cowley.

IMPOST, n. s. [impost, impdt, French; imposi- sum, Latin.] A tax; a toll; custom paid.

Taxes and imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loath in the shire. Bacon, Es.

IMPOSTS, n. s. [imposte, Fr.] In architecture, that part of a pillar, in vaults and arches, on which the weight of the whole building lieth. Ainsworth.

TO IMPOSTUMATE, v. n. [from impostum- are.] To form an abscess; to gather;
to form a cyst or bag containing matter.

That high food of spiritual pride and confidence
— will be sure to impostumate in the soul.

Hammond, Works, liv. 574.

The bruise impostumated, and afterwards turned to a stinking ulcer, which every body shy to come near him. Arbuthnot.

TO IMPOSTUMATE, v. a. To afflict with an imposthume.

Our vices impostumate our fancies.

Sir G. D'Uck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1616); p. 50.

I have lanced them to the quick, and not only let out the imposthumed matter, but taken away the proud and dead flesh.

Dr. Griffith, Simarion Revisited, (1660), p. 41.
They would not but that surgeons, whose lancet threatens none but the imposthumed of the body.

Diction of Chr. Picty.

IMPOSTHUMATION. n. s. [from imposthumus, mal.] The act of forming an imposthume; the state in which an imposthume is formed.

He that maketh the wound bleed lavishly, endangers malignant ulcers and pernicious imposthumes.

Diocæs, Ex.

IMPOSTHUME. n. s. [This seems to have been formed by corruption from impostem, as South writes it; and impostem to have been written erroneously for apostem, ἀποστήμα, an abscess.] A collection of purulent matter in a bag or cyst.

Now rotten diseases, ruptures, catarrhs, and bladders full of imposthumes, make preposterous discourses.

Shakespeare.

An error in the judgment is like an imposthume in the head, which is always noisome, and frequently mortal.

South.

Fumes cannot transude through the bag of an imposthume.

Harvey on Conceptionism.

To IMPOSTHUME.* v. n. [from the noun.] To breed an imposthume.

Huot.

To IMPOSTHUME.* v. a. To affect with an imposthume.

I did always foresee, that your imposthumed stomach would belch some loathsome matter.

Hayward, Ana. to Doleman, ch. 5.

IMPOSTOR. n. s. [imposteur, Fr. from imposere; impositor, Latin.] One who cheats by a fictitious character.

Shame and pain, poverty and sickness, you death and bell itself, are but the trophies of those fatal conquests got by that grand impostor, the devil, over the deluded sons of men.

South.

IMPOSTUME.* See IMPOSTHUME, and To IMPOSTHUME. The word was formerly written oftener without the h than with it.

IMPOSTURAGE.* n. s. [from imposture.] Impostion; cheat. Not part of an impost.

Many other practices of human art and invention, which help credulencies, lameness, dimness of sight, &c. no man is so foolish as to impute to the devil's invention, or to count them any lawful impostures.

Dr. Taylor, Arif. Handson, p. 127.

IMPOSTURE. n. s. [imposture, Fr. from impostura, Latin.] Cheat; fraud; supposititiousness; cheat committed by giving to persons or things a false character.

That the soul and angels have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinionated; but who is it that retains not a great part of the imposture, by allowing them a definite ut, which is but bait imagination?

Glennville, Scrup.

Open to them so many of the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserves.

Freige.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with that title.

South.

Fortn new legends.

And fill the world with follies and impostures.

Penr.

IMPOSTURED.* adj. [from imposture.] Having the nature of imposture.

HOVING 11.

What have vile I to do with noble day,
Which shows us heaven's fair face! that face which I

Wantonly scorn'd, and cast my love away
Upon impostur'd lust's foul mystery.

Ben Jonson, Epitaph, ii. 109.

IMPOSTUROUS. adj. [from imposture.] Deceitful; cheating.

Twice my thoughts were prompted by mine eye to hold thy strictness false and imposturous.

Rowe, and Fl. Wrenn-Hater.

A proud, lustful, imposturous villain.

More, Lett. ix. Ward's Life of Dr. More, p. 352.

IMPTENCE.† n. s. [imptence, old Fr.] IMPTENCY.* impotentia, Latin.

1. Want of power; inability; imbecility; weakness.

Some were poor by imptency of nature; as young fatherless children, old decrepit persons, idiots, and cripples.

Sir J. Hayward.

Weakness, or the impotence of exercising animal motion, attends fevers.

Arbuthnot.

God is a friend and a father, whose care supplies our wants, and defends our impotence, and from whom compassion in Christ we hope for eternal glory hereafter.

Rogers.

This is not a restraint or imptency, but the royal prerogative of the most absolute King of kings; that he will do no nothing but what he can; and that he can do nothing which is repugnant to his divine goodness.

Beattie.

2. Ungovernableness of passion. A Latin signification: animi impetiva.

Be so, or so, or so, let loose at once his ire, Belike through imptency, or unwariness,

To give his enemies their wish, and end

Them in his anger, whom his anger saves

To punish endless? Milton, P. L.

Yet all comble'd,

Your beauty and my impotence mind. Dryden.

3. Incapacity of propagation.

Dulness with cleanness must prove

As hateful, sure, as imptency in love. Pope.

IMPTENT. adj. [imptent, Fr. impotent, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble; wanting force; wanting power.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impost, and not please ourselves.

Hooker.

Yet woe is imptent

To gain dominion, or to keep it gain'd.

Milton, P. L.

Although in dreadful whirls we hung,

High on the broken wave,

I knew thou wert not slow to bear,

Nor imptent to save. Addison, Spect.

2. Disabled by nature or disease.

In those porches lay a great multitude of imptent folk, of blind, halt, and withered.

St. John, v. 8.

There sat a certain man, imptent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked.

Acts, xiv.

I have learn'd that fearful commencing

I leaden servitor to dull delay;

Delay leads imptent and snail-paced beggary.

Shakespeare.

The imptent poor might be relieved, and the idle forced to labour.

Temple.

3. Without power of restraint. [Animi impotent.]

With jealous eyes at distance had seen, Whisp'ring with Jove, the silver-footed queen;

Then, imptent of tongue, her silence broke,

Thus turbulent in rattling tones she spoke. Dryden.

4. Without power of propagation.

He told bea Prim, who is thought imptent, that his mistress would not have him, because he is a sloven, and had committed a rape. Tutler.

IMPTENT.* n. s. One who languishes under disease.

Your task shall be

With all the fierce endeavor of your wit,

To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

IMPTENTLY.† adv. [from imptent.]

1. Without power.

The church of England is blessed with a true clergy, and glorious; and such a one, as its Italian generation may imptently envy and marvel at.

Dr. Hall, Hon. of the More, Clergy, p. 94.

Proud Caesar, amidst triumphal cars, The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars, Ignobly vain, and imptently great,

Show'd Rome her Caesar's figure drawn in state.

Pope.

2. Without government of passion; extravagantly.

He loves her most imptently, and the loves not him.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 576.

The danger is of being imptently passionate.

More, Conj. Cobb. p. 503.

To IMPOVERISH.* See To EMPOVERISH.

IMPOVERISHER.* n. s. [from impoverish.] One that impoverishes. See EMPOVERISHER.

These were the pious impoverishers of bishops first, and then the kings of England.

Bp. Gauden, Arch. Deat-Berth, (1611), p. 70.

IMPOVERISHMENT.* n. s. [from impoverish.] Cause of poverty; drain of wealth. See EMPOVERISHMENT.

It might tend to the state's impoverishment.

Proceedings against Gornet, (1606.) sign. H. b.

The king afterwaid extended his bounty in so large and ample a manner, as procured his own impoverishment.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 4.

To IMPOUND. v. a. [in and pound. See POUND.]

1. To enclose as in a pound; to shut in; to confine.

The great care was rather how to impound the rebels, than that none of them might escape, than that any doubt was made to vanquish them.

2. To shut up in a pinfold.

England.

Hath taken and impounded as a stray

The king. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray, and impounded him, with intention to restore him to the right owner.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

To IMPOWER. See To EMPOWER.

IMPRACITABILITY.* n. s. [from impracticable.] Impossibility.

IMPRACITICABLE. adj. [impracticable, Fr. in and practicable.]

1. Not to be performed; unfeasible; impossible.

Had there not been still remaining bodies, the legitimate offspring of the stitellian earth,

'twould have been an extravagant and impracticable undertaking to have gone about to determine any thing concerning it.

Woodward.

To preach up the necessity of that which our experience tells us is utterly impracticable, were as asiffight marking with the terrible prospect of universal damnation.

Rogers.

2. Untractable; unmanageable; stubborn.

That fierce impracticable nature

Is govern'd by a dainty-finger'd girl.

Rowe.

IMPRACITABLENESS.† n. s. [from impracticable.]

1. Impossibility.

I do not know a greater mark of an able minister than that of rightly adapting the several faculties of men, nor is any thing more to be lamented than the impossibility of doing this. Swift.

2. Untractableness; stubbornness.

The greatest difficulty in these sieges was from the impossibility of the ground.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, (Q. Ann.)

To IMPRECATE. v. a. [imprecator, Lat.]

To call for evil upon himself or others.

IMPRECATION. n. s. [imprecatio, Lat. imprecation, Fr. from imprecate.] Curse; prayer by which any evil is wished to another or himself.

My mother shall the horrid furies raise

With imprecations. Chapman, Odyssey.

Sir John Hatham, uncurd by any imprecation of mine, paid his own and his eldest son's heads.

King Charles.

With imprecations that he fill'd the air,
And angry Neptune heard th' unrighteous pray'r.

Pope.

IMPRECATOR. adj. [from imprecate.] Containing wishes of evil.

To IMPREGNATE. v. a. [in and prægnare, Lat.]

Lord Monbodo considered this word as coined by Milton; but it was common before his time, though Dr. Johnson found no example earlier than that of the poet. To fill with young; to fill with any matter or quality; to make pregnant.

The case did again appear with a linen hanging thereat so grossly impregnated, as it promised to be delivered of a most happy burthen.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quirato, iv. 13.

Somelc doth Bacchus bear,
Impregn'd of Jove. Mere, Song of the Soul, l. 58.

In her ears the sound

Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregn'd

With reason, to her seeming. Milton, P. L.

The unfruitful rock itself, impregn'd by thee,
Forms lucid stones. Thomson.

IMPREGNABLE. adj. [impregnable, Fr.]

1. Not to be stormed; not to be taken.

Two giants kept themselves in a castle, seated upon the top of a rock, impregnable, because there was no coming to it but by one narrow path, where one man's force was able to keep down an army.

Sidney.

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps alone defend ourselves. Shakespeare.

Hast thou not him, and all

Which he calls his, enclosed with a wall
Of strength impregnable? Sandys.

There the capitol thou see'st,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpæan rock, her citadel

Impregnable. Milton, P. R.

2. Unshaken; unmoved; unaffected; invincible.

The man's affection remains wholly unconcerned and impregnable; just like a rock, which, being plied continually by the waves, still throws them back again, but is not at all moved. South.

IMPREGNABLY. adv. [from impregnable.]

In such a manner as to defy force or hostility.

A castle strongly seated on a high rock, joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnable fortified. Sandys.

To IMPREGNATE. v. a. [in and prægnare, Lat.]

1. To fill with young; to make prolific.

Hermaphrodites, although they include the parts of both sexes, cannot impregnate themselves. Brown.
Christianity is of so prolific a nature, so apt to impregnate the hearts and lives of its proselytes, that it is hard to imagine that any branch should want a due fertility. Deacy of Præg.

2. [Impregnate, Fr.] To fill; to saturate.

To IMPREGNATE. v. n. To become pregnant.

Were they, like Spanish jennets, to impregnate by the winds, they could not have thought on a more proper invention. Addison, Misc. No. 127.

IMPREGNATE. adj. [from the verb.] Impregnated; made prolific.

The soul hereby grows (as it were) big, and impregnate with a temptation. South, Sermon, v. 155.

With native earth their blood the monsters mix'd;

The blood, endu'd with animating heat,
Did in the impregnate earth new worms beget.

Dryden.

IMPREGNATION. n. s. [from impregnate.]

1. The act of making prolific; fecundation.

They ought to refer matters unto counsellors, which is the first begetting or impregnation; but when they are elaborate in the womb of their counsel, and grow ripe to be brought forth, then they take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

2. That with which any thing is impregnated.

What could implant in the body such peculiar impregnations, as should have such power?

Darham, Phys. Theol.

3. [Impregnation, Fr.] Saturation.

Ainsworth.

IMPREGNADICATE. adj. [in, præ, and judicio, Lat.] Unprejudiced; not prepossessed; impartial.

The valid reason of one man with imprejudicate apprehensions, begets a belief as the authority or aggregated testimony of many hundreds. Brown.

IMPREGNATION. n. s. [in and preparation.] Unpreparedness; want of preparation.

Impregnation and unreadiness when they find in us, they turn it to the soothing up of themselves. Hooder.

It is our infidelity, our impregnation, that makes death any other than advantage.

Hip. Hall, Centimel. B. 4.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE. adj. [old French, imprescriptible.] Without the compass of prescription; by no length of time to be aliened or lost. Such is Cotuvrac's translation of imprescriptible. Coles gives the same definition of the word as an English one, Dict. 1685. It therefore is not modern in our language; though perhaps it was little regarded, till the late French democratical revolutionists had appended theirs to the words, the true import of which they grossly violated, "the rights of men and citizens." It appears to have been forgotten, when Johnson compiled his dictionary.

The end of every political association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man.

Norris, Rec. of the Fr. Decl. &c. Ess. (1810), li. 156.

To IMPRESS. v. a. [impresser, old Fr. To print; impressum, Lat.]

1. To print by pressure; to stamp.

When God from earth form'd Adam in the East,
He his own image on the clay impress'd. Danham.

The conquering chief his foot impress'd

On the strong neck of that destructive beast.

Dryden, Ovid.

2. To fix deep.

We should dwell upon the arguments, and impress the motion of persuasion upon our own hearts, till we feel the force of them. Watts.

3. To mark; as impressed by a stamp.

So foul and ugly, that exceeding fear
Their viages impress'd, when they approached near.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. To force into service. This is generally now spoken and written press.

[His] age has charms in it, [his] tide more,
To pluck the common looseness on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes

Which do command them. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Burnan-wood to Dunsinane's high hill

Shall come against him.

— That will never be;

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare.

Ormond should contribute all he could for the making those levies of men, and for impressing of ships. Clarendon.

IMPRESS. v. s. [from the verb.] Dr. Johnson places the accent on the last syllable, according to the ancient pronunciation; but it is now most frequently placed on the first.

1. Mark made by pressure.

This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

They having taken the impresses of the insides of these shells with that exquisite niceness, as to express even the finest lineaments of them.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Effects of one substance or another.

Now objects are represented to myself I cannot be ignorant, but in what manner they are received, and what impresses they make upon the differing organs of another, he only knows that feels them.

Glauville, Scipio.

3. Mark of distinction; stamp.

God, surveying the works of the creation, leaves us this general impress or character upon them, that they were exceeding good. South.

4. Device; motto. [Impressa, Italian. And so our own word was formerly written either impreca or imprete.]

Impress, and device rare,

Of all her gallant knights.

Pocock, Min. Brit. (1619).

A galling impress for you at Ails.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 73.

Imblazon'd shields,

Impress quiver, caparisons and steeds.

Milton, P. L.

5. Act of forcing any into service; compulsion; seizure. Now commonly press.

Ajax was here voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose were task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Your ships are not well man'd.

Your mariners are multitudes, rascals, people

Ingrate by swift impress.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Impression; image fixed in the mind.

That he should give himself up to meer inconsiderate imaginations, and casual impressions, choosing them for his guide, because they are the strongest, not true! Mere, Conf. Cato. (1653), p. 245.

IMPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from impressible.] Capability of being impressed.

They [blue eyes] are sure signs of a tender impression, and sympathy disposition.

Philosoph. Lett. on Phlogistony, (1751), p. 229.
IMPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and pressum, Lat.] That may be impressed.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurative and not figurative, are plain and notions.

Heron, Not. Hist.
IMPRE'SSION. n. s. [impressio, Lat.; impressio, Fr.]

1. The act of pressing one body upon another.

Sensation is such an impression or motion, made in some part of the body, as produces some perception in the understanding. Locke.

2. Mark made by pressure; stamp.
 Like to a chaos, or which'd bear welch,
 That carries no impression like the dam.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 3. Image fixed in the mind.

Were the offices of religion strip of all the external decencies, they would not make a due impression on the mind. Asterbury.

The false representations of the kingdom's enemies had made some impression in the mind of the successor. Swift.

4. Efficacious agency; operation; influence.

The king had made him high sheriff of Sussex, that he might the better make impression upon that county. Clarendon.

We lie open to the impression of flattery, which we admit without scruple, because we think we deserve it.

Universal gravitation is above all mechanism, and proceeds from a divine energy and impression.

Bentley.
 There is a real knowledge of material things, when the thing itself, and the real action and impression thereof on our senses, is perceived. Cloyne.

5. Effect of an attack.

Such a defeat of near two hundred horse, seconded with two thousand foot, may surely endure a comparison with any of the bravest impressions in ancient times. Watson.

6. Edition; number printed at once; one course of printing.

To be distracted with many opinions, makes men to be of the last impression, and full of change.

Bacon.
 For ten impressions, which his works have had in so many years, at present a hundred books are scarcely purchased once a twelvemonth. Dryden.

IMPRE'SSIVE.* adj. [from impress.]

1. Capable of being impressed; susceptible.

A soft and impressive fancy.
Spencer on Prodiges, (1665), p. 75.

No men more subject to such delusions, than men of devout affections, if of strong fancies, impressive tempers, and weak intellects.

Spencer, Faus. of Valg. Prods, p. 70.

2. Capable of making impression; as, an impressive discourse.

IMPRE'SSIVELY.* adv. [from impressive.]

In a powerful or impressive manner.

IMPRE'SSIVENESS.* n. s. [from impressive.]

The quality of being impressive.

IMPRE'SSURE.* n. s. [from impress.] The mark made by pressure; the dint; the impression.

Lean but upon a rish,
 The elastic and capable impressure
 Thy palm some moments keeps.

Shakespeare, As you like it.
IMPRE'ST.* n. s. [imprestans, Ital. from imprestare, to lend or give before hand.]

A kind of earnest money; money advanced; a loan.

IMPRE'VALENCY.* n. s. [in and prevalence.]

Incapability of prevailing.

That nothing can separate God's elect from his everlasting love, he proves it by induction of the most powerful agents, and triumphs in the impotence and imprevalency of them all.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 276.
IMPRIMATUR.* n. s. [Latin.]

A word formerly at the beginning of books, signifying let it be printed; a licence to print.

Sometimes five imprimaturs are seen together dialogue-wise in the plates of one title-page.

Milton, Areopagitica.
 With what seal and outrage have you asserted its [the press's] liberty from the bondage of imprimatur, and the imposition of prelates?

Bp. Parker, Rep. of Bishops, Transp. p. 191.
 That shall my title pass a sacred seal,
 Receive an imprimatur from above,
 While angels shout, An infidel reclaim'd!

Young, Night Th. 7.

Cleane the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters; the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbuthnot.

TO IMPURIFY. v. a. [impurificare, Ital. impurifier, Fr. See TO EMPURIFY.]

But our old lexicography writes it impurple. See Sherwood's Dict. To make red; to colour as with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright pavement, that like a sea of Jasper shone, Impurified with celestial roses wait'd. Mil. P. L.

IMPURIFY. adj. [from impure].

1. Chargeable upon any one; that of which one may be accused.

It is rather imputable to that prudent modesty which so much becomes every sober woman. Dr. Taylor, Ant. Henderson, p. 168.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then she shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wise imputable. Argyle, Paragon.

IMPURIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from impurifiable].

The quality of being impurifiable.
'Tis necessary to the impurifiableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPURATION. n. s. [impuration, Fr. from impure].

1. Attribution of any thing; generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our impuration shall be only paid;
To this wild action. Shakespeare, Tr. and Crea.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandise, do fall into some lewd action, the impuration of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakespeare.

To use intellctions and valuations in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous impuration is derogatory to him; and arrogant in us. Glanville, Scrup.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any impuration of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the impuration of being near their master. Shakespeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatever happens, they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar impuration, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hobbes.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless impurations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any impuration upon this matter. Dryden.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Antioch is a good man.
— Have you heard any impuration to the contrary? — No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

IMPURITATIVE. adj. [from impurity]. That may impure.

In all things righteousness, acceptance, or sanctification, is free and impuritative. Tr. of Hallinger's Sermon, p. 1059.

The fourth is the impuritative righteousness of Christ, either exploded or out rightly understood. Nelson, Life of Dr. Bull.

IMPURITATIVELY. adv. [from impuritative]. By impuration; attributively.

Sarah made choice of a slave, rather than a free woman, to bring to her husband's bed, that the child, which the slave might happen to bear, might impuritatively, at least, be accounted hers. Stanhope, Hist. of the B. 3. ch. 1.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputare, Fr. imputo, Lat.].

1. To charge upon; to attribute; generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom. ix. 22.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovates but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived, for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and imputes others; and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon, Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Dryden.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to Lord Balthard, called a Dissertation on Parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall above thee who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton, P. L.

IMPUTER† n. s. [from impute.] One that imputes. Sherwood.

IN† prep. [in, Lat. in, Sax. in, Gothic.]
1. Noting the place where anything is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the useful Faifae.

In this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel, Civil Wars.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconceit appear the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one power is yet brought forth, whereby it as must ought to be so in very deed. Hobbes.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms.

Danger before, and is, and after the act.

You needs must grant, in great, Daniel, Civil Wars.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the avert, there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is as unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds
the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man.

5. Noting proportion.

Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.

I cannot but lament the common course, which,
at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.

6. According to.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Collier.

7. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said in it.

8. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakspeare, Cæsar.

Now in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death revenged.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence.

10. Formerly in the sense of on; which was a common usage, and continued in Milton's time. Wicliffe and Chaucer
so use it.

But she agnize him in the shield did smite.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 16.

And in his necke
Her proud foot looks up. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 40.
All who in vain things
Built their food hopes of glory.
Milton, P. L. iii. 448.

11. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men unloved, and limited with crouer. Hobbes.
He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search.

12. Is as much. Since; seeing that.

These things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might say our doing of them if we would.

In. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the secret bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.

'These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

'Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loves and who wies; who's in, who's out.

4. Noting present time.

Unless never patient then declaim at go,
Must good man, be has been fairly in? Pope.

5. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table,
serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

6. Noting place.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?

— Let me see: I'll in, I'll in; follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

7. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in.

8. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run under their words if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

9. In has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin:
so, active denotes that which acts,
inactive that which does not act. Act,
before r is changed into t; as irregular;
before l into l; as illative; and into m
before some other consonants; as im- probable.

INABILITY. n. s. [in and ability.] Impusance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to 'inure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hobbes.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended, and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Regina.

INABSTINENCE. n. s. [in and abstinence.]
Interference; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring upon man. Milton, P. L.

INADVERTENTLY. adv. [in and adversely.]
Without abuse.

A state of mortality shall always want that infinite wisdom, and purity of intention which resides in the Deity, and which makes power to consist inadventually only there, as in its proper sphere.

Light in the Way to Paradise, (1689), p. 91.

INACCESSIBILITY. n. s. [in and inaccessi- ble.] State of being inaccessible.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it, nature having supplied that with the inaccessibility of the precipice.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessi-, Fr. in and accessible.] Not to be reached;
not to be approached.

What'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us.

Hale, Orig. of Manikind.

There shall we see the uses and uses of these penetrates, which here were either too subtle for us to come to say distinct view of.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her.

INACCESSIBLY. adv. [in and inaccessible.]
So as not to be approached.

Mr. Bryant supposes that this piece of reconcile northern mythology was inaccessibly shut up in Spelman, Asner, &c.

INACURACY† n. s. [in and accuracy.]
Want of exactness.

It does not then proceed from any peculiar irregularity, or difficulty of our languages, that the general practice, both of speaking and writing it, is chargeable with inaccuracy.

[There are] two small inaccuracies in this sentence. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 512.

INACCURATE† adj. [in and accurate.]
Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

The expression is plainly inaccurate.

Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 515.

Leland is also inaccurate at least, in representing the edition by Thyrane as coming next after that by Caxton. Tyrrill on Chaucer.

INACURATELY. adv. [in and inaccurate.]
Not correctly.

What may be used as an argument? Why, either the allegorical persons, or the beauty they have in such compositions. Very inaccurately expressed, take it which way you will meet after.

Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 273.

INACTION† n. s. [inaction, Fr. in and action.]
Cessation from labour; inaction.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present;
I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction.

Pope.

Ferments of the worst kind succeed to perfect inaction. Dr. Berkeley, Maxims, § 38.

INACTIVE.† adj. [in and active.]

1. Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

His [Rowe's] plays are musical and pleasing poems; but inactive and unimproving tragedies.

Dr. Hutton, Ess. on Pope.

Others are — doomed to lose four months in inactive obscurity. Johnson, Dissertor, No. 124.

2. Unfavourable to activity.

Not the vain visions of inactive scholars, Nor fancy's maxims, not opinion's rules, E'er form'd the man, whose generous warmth extends

T' enrich his country. Shakespeare.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively lingers it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. s. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Dugger.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast, Is inactivity at best. Swift.

TO INACTUATE. v. a. [from actuate.] To put into action.

The plastic in them is too highly awakened, to inactivate into an aerial body. Glanville, Pre-ead. of Souls, p. 145.

INACTUATION. n. s. [from inactivate.] Operation.

They [the creatures] were then constituted in the inactivation and exercise of their nobler and most perfect powers. Glanville, Pre-ead. p. 115.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remove for vice

Not paid, or paid inadequate in price, What further means can reason now direct? Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADEQUATENESS. n. s. [from inadequate.] Defect of proportion.

That may be collected generally from the inadequateness of the visible means to most notable productions. Goetsius, Vind. Ess. Conf. P. II.

INADEQUATION. n. s. [in and adequation.] Want of exact correspondence.

The difference only arising from inadequation of languages. Cot. in Fuller's Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 418.

INADMISSIBLE. adj. [Fr. inadmissible,] an old word in that language; but, in ours, of modern date. Mr. Malone attributes the introduction of it to William Pitt, first Earl of Chatham.] Not to be allowed, or admitted.

It must always be remembered, that bishop Lowth's version is designed for the learned: in one for vulgar use "sarec" for "choice vine," "ilex" for "green oak," &c. would be clearly inadmissible.

Ap. Newman, Ess. on Bibl. Transl. p. 305.

INADVERTENCE. n. s. [inadvertence, Fr. INADVERTENCY. from inadvertent.]

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a difference between them, as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. Smith.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present, that they mind nothing else. L'Esclapart.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertency or inconsideration.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.

INADVERTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.

Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Cleo and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently.

Brownie, Notes on the Odyssey.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost path. Richardson, Sirrino.

INADVERTISEMENT. n. s. [in and advertissement.] Inadvertence.

Constant objects lose their hints, and steal an inadvertissement upon us. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

INAFFABILITY. n. s. [from inaffable.] Reservedness in conversation. Coles.

INAFFABLE. adj. [in and affable.] Reserved; sour; uncourteous; unpleasant in conversation. See AFFABLE. Scott.

INAFECTATION. n. s. [in and affectation.] The state of being void of affectation.

INAFECTEDLY. adv. [from inafectad.] Without affectation; "inaffectedly, done carelessly." Not in use. Cockram.

INADABLE. adj. [from in and aid.] Not to be assisted.

Labouring art can never answer nature From her invincible estate. Shaks. All's Well.

INALIENABLE.† adj. [inalienable, old Fr.] That cannot be alienated, or granted to another.

This grant or concession was made originally upon condition that the said lands should be inalienable.

Hist. Desc. of the Kingd. of Monaco, (1701.) p. 88.

It [the land] was not originally inalienable. Burke, Speech in Parl. (1772.)

INALIENABLENESS. n. s. [from the adjective.] The state of being inalienable.

INALIMENTAL. adj. [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.

Delicacy imports a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.

INALTERABLE. adj. [in and alterable.] Not to be changed or altered.

The heavens — being made of an incorruptible and inalterable quintessence. Hobbes on Providence, p. 75.

INAMABLE. adj. [in and amiable.] Unpleasant; not to be beloved.

INAMABLENESS. n. s. [from inamiable.] Unloveliness; the want of amiable qualities. Scott.

INAMISSIBLE.† adj. [inamissible, Fr.; in and amissus, Lat.] Not to be lost.

These advantages are inamissible. Hemond.

Fixed in an inamissible happiness. Glanville, Pre-ead. p. 68.

INAMISSIBLENESS. n. s. [from inamissible.] The state of being inamissible. Scott.

INAMORATO.† n. s. [Ital. innamorato.] One in love. See ENAMORADO.

It appears to have once had the English form of innamorato; for thus Cockram gives it, in his old vocabulary, "innamorates, lovers." But innamorato has kept its ground down to our own times.

It is usually a contemptuous expression.

Perform'd innamorato. Morison, Scourge of Folly, (1599.) iii. 10.

All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all innamorates. Tatler, No. 27.

Distracted innamorates, or spiritual or sensual. Dr. Lestrange, Ess. of Methodists, vol. i. p. 57.

We are both worshippers and innamorato of this mother of the gods, antiquity. Warburton to Hard, Lett. 199.

INANE. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void. It is used licentiously for a substantive.

We sometimes speak of place in the great void, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.

TO INANIMATE.† v. a. [in and animo, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. This word is not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the poetical passage from Donne. Donne, however, was fond of the word.

There's a kind of world remaining still; Though she, which did inanimate and fill The world, be gone, yet in this last long night

Her ghost doth walk, that is, a shimmering light. Donne, Poems, p. 204.

This child of mine, inanimated by your gracious acceptance. Donne, Devot. Ejus. Dedic.

Youth is their critical day, that judges them, that decorates them, that inanimates and informs them. Donne, Devot. p. 334.

INANIMATE. adj. [inanimatus, Latin; INANIMATED.† inanimé, French.] Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon.

The golden goddess, present at the prayer, Well knew her meant to inanimate fair, And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Beatty.

Both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimated part of the universe. Cleyn, Philos. Princip.

From roofs when Verrio's colours fall, And leave inanimate the naked wall, Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.

INANIMATE. n. s. [from To inanimate.] Animation. Not usual.

We may well consider the body, before the soul came, before inanimation, to be without sin. Deane, Devot. p. 581.

INANIMATION. n. s. [inanimation, Fr. inanis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fullness in the vessels of the animal.

Repletion and inanimation may both do harm in two contrary extremes. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 235.

Weakness which attends fever proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanimation in the latter end of the disease. Arbutnot on Diet.

INA'NITY.† n. s. [inanité, Fr. inanimité, Lat.]
1. Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities, but as little does it admit of anything that can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide.
Digby on Bodies.

2. Vanity.

These topperies are the chief of the effect.—
Their inanity gives them weight and credit.
Fleury, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 42.

INA'PPETENCE.* n. s. [in and appetence.]
Want of appetite.

Some squamous and disordered person takes a long walk to the physician's lodging to beg some remedy for his inappetence.

Boyle against Cancer. Sweet. p. 106.
INA'PPETENCY.† n. s. [in and appetencia, Lat.] Want of stomach or appetite.

INAPPLICABLE. adj. [in and applicable.]
Not to be put to a particular use.

INAPPLICABILITY. n. s. [inapplicability, Fr. in and application.] Indolence; negligence.

INAPPROPRIATE.* adj. [in and apposite.] Ill placed; ill timed; not to the purpose.

INAPPREHENSIBLE.* adj. [in and apprehensible.] Not intelligible.

Those celestial songs to others inapprehensible, but not to those who were not deluded with women.
Milton, Apol. for Smeagolimus.

INAPPREHENSIVE.* adj. [in and apprehensive.] Not noticing; regardless.

By flying deliciously every day over the summits of the evils of mankind, inapprehensive of the troubles of their brethren, unconcerned in the changes of the world, and the cries of the poor, the hunger of the fatherless, and the thirst of widows.
For. Taylor, Sermon. (1653), p. 306.

INAPPRITUDE.* n. s. [in and aptitude.]
Unfitness.

Hence one may give a strong conjecture of the options or inaptitude of one's capacity to that study.
Hewell, Lett. (dat. 1615), l. i. 9.

INAPQUATE.* adj. [in and aguate, Lat.] Embodied in water. Not in use.

For as much as he is joined to the bread but sacramentally, there follows no imputation thereof, no more than the Holy Ghost is inapt, that is to say, made void, being sacramentally joined to the water in baptism.

Atty. Cranmer, Answer to Ep. Gardiner, p. 368.

INAPQUATION.* n. s. [in and inquate.] The state of being inquate.

The second reason is almost as fondly handled, alluding from imputation to inaptation.

Ep. Gardiner, Reply to Atty. Cranmer, p. 369.

INARABLE. adj. [in and arabiles, Lat.] Not capable of tillage.

To INAR'CH. v. a. [in and arch.]
Inarching is a method of grafting which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch the tree would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined, the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock; you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder.

In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Williams, Meth. Magic.
By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, does in churches.

Dryden.

INARTICULATELY. adv. [in and inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

Whispered inarticulate in our hearts.

Hammond, Works, iv. 497.

INARTICULATENESS. n. s. [in and inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTICULATION.* n. s. [in and inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; indistinctness in pronouncing.

The oracles assumed to be obscure; but then it was by the ambiguity of the expression, and not by the inarticulation of the words.

Ld. Chesterfield.

INARTIFICIAL.† adj. [in and artificial.]
1. Contrary to art.

I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also.

Deacy of Poetry.

2. Not made by art; plain; simple; artless; rude.

It was the inartificial process of the experiment, and not the acuteness of any commentary upon it, which they have had in veneration.

Syret, Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 91.

Words of such amazing force and comprehension, [St. Matt. vi. 6–9.] and at the same time of such a wonderful and inartificial simplicity, as must convince the most hardened infidel, would he give himself leave thoroughly to attend to them, of that divine spirit and wisdom, by which the author of them most unquestionably spoke.

Cowley, Poet. to Epist. Conv. i.

If poetry be compared with painting, in respect of this its merely natural and inartificial resemblance.

Harris on Music, Poetry, &c. iii. § 2.

Petty barbarian states, intent only on repelling their neighbours or enlarging their territories, unfurnished with arts or letters, and from their natural ferocity, cherishing the most violent jealousy, and dominion of the principles of mutual confidence, possessed no other mode of adjusting their differences, and securing their frontiers, than to construct these inartificial bulwarks, serving at once for division and defence, planned on the simplest mechanism, and executed by the mere strength of tumultuary multitudes.

Warren, Hist. of Kildgallon, p. 64.

INARTIFICIALLY. adv. [inartificially.]
Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when it is affected by those of a self-denying profession.

Calder.

INATTENTION. n. s. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect; heedlessness.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproaches of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect.

Rogers.
We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect.

Novel lays attract our raptur'd ears;
But old, the mind with inattention bears.

Pope.

INATTENTIVE. adj. [in and attentive.]
Heedless; careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit.

Watts.

INATTENTIVELY. adv. [in and inattentive.]
Without attention; heedlessly.

INAUDIBLE. adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and voiceless foot of time
Stalks, ere we can effect them.

Shakespeare.

To INAUGURATE.† v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

These beginnings of years were very propitious unto him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear as well of the times as of the will.

Fleury, Lett. of D. of Buck.

He had taken with him Alford, his youngest son, to be there inaugurated.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

Brown, Fable, &c.

INAUGURATORY.* adj. [from inaugurate.]
Respecting inauguration.

After so many inauguratory gratulations, nuptial hymns, and funeral dirges, he must be highly favoured by nature, or by fortune, who says any thing not said before.

Johnson, Life of Dryden.

INAURATION. n. s. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been some where then.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

INAUSPICATE.* adj. [in and auspicate. See To AUSPICATE.] Ill omened. Though it bore an inauspicate face, it proved of a friendly event.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 43.

INAUSPICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here

I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world's-weaving flesh.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Though Heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity.

Her eye a strong nymph can give;
Beauty, smiles, and love shall live.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph in all the plain;
She plang'd him hopeless in a deep despair.

Dryden.

INAUSPICIOUSLY.* adv. [from inauspicious.] With ill omens; with bad fortune.

INAUSPICIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from inauspicious.] The state or quality of being inauspicious.

Scott.

INBEGING. n. s. [in and being.] Inher-ence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inebred, but for they have a sort of inbeking in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it.

Watts.

INBORN.* adj. [in and born.] Innate;
implanted by nature.

These not ingrav'd, but inborn dignities,
Caskets of souls.

Dante, Poems, p. 160.

Led by some of good,
Iboms to ill, I sought my needful food.

All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them.

Some Carolina, to Heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee.

Adams.

INBREATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair from symphony, pledges of Heaven's joy,

Milton, Ode.

INBRED.* adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

That other inward inbred cause of melancholy, is our temperature, in whole or part, which we receive from our parents.

Barton, Anat. of M. p. 60.

The inbred delight measure in secular vanities.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 342.

My inbred ecstasy
Forth issue'd.

A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some esteem for the setting of that inbred affection at work.

But he unborn d'contains their idle threat;
And inbred worth doth boasting vaunt slight.

Dryden.

TO INBREED.* v. a. [from bred.] To produce; to raise.

It is inbred, and an impressed belief in all,
that our souls have a divine original.

These abilities — as of intellect, love, the office of a pulpit, to inbred and cherish in a great people the seeds of virtue and public civility.

Milton, Rest. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

And hell too strongly.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

By Adam's hearkening to his wife, inakind, that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death.

The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by announcing themselves all round, move a man to think that these tales are the effects of imagination for animates, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely.

The cause of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The nuptial rights his outrage strat against
The sister's desire is his transgred'd friends;
The incantation backward she repeats.

Inverts her rod, and what she did, defers. Garth.
The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, that might look like incantations and magic, but had no tendency to make mankind the lazzier.

INCANTATORY. adj. [from incanto, Lat.]
Dealing by enchantment; magical.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors, daily delude them.

The Christians, who carried their religion through so many persecutions, were incessantly comforting one another with the example and history of our Saviour and his apostles. Addison.

INCESTE. n. s. [inceste, French; incestum, Latin.] "They call incest an unlawful meddling of a man with a woman, against the honour of blood and affinity. For cestus significth the marriage girdle, which the bride did wear, to shew that the marriage was just and lawful." Transl. of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 296.

The etymology, which has been assigned to the Latin word, is more simple, viz. in and cestus. And the Latin word, as well as the Italian, means also any forbidden union between the sexes. See Baldelli's Life of Boccaccio, note, p. 161. "Per incesto il Boccaccio non intendeva soltanto la culpa che macchia il consanguineo letto, ma ogni illegittimo commercio." Unnatural and criminal conjunction of persons within degrees prohibited.

It's not a kind of incest to take life From thine own sister's shame? Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

He who entered in the first act, a young man like Pericles, prince of Tyre, must not be in danger in the fifth act of committing incest with his daughter. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

INCESTUOUS. adj. [incestuous, French.] Guilty of incest; guilty of unnatural cohabitation.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand, Thou perjur'd prince of Tyre, must not be in danger in the fifth act of committing incest with his daughter. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

We may easily guess with what impatience the world would have heard an incestuous Herod discoursing of chastity. South.
Ere you reach to this incestuous love, You must divide and human rights remove. Dryden.

INCESTUOUSLY. adv. [from incestuous.] With unnatural love.
Macareus and Canace, son and daughter to Zolius, god of the winds, loved each other incestuously. Dryden.

INCESTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from incestuous.] State of incest.
The horrible incestuousness of this match. By. Holl. Cares of Conscience.

INCH. n. s. [ince, Sax.; uncia, Lat.]

To INCCHOATE. v. a. [inchoo, Lat.] To begin; to commence.

Plato mentions, that the great soul of this world does at least inchoate, and rudely delineate, the fabric of our body at first.

Merr, Song of the Sops, Notes, (1647), p. 583.

The higher congruity of life being yet but imperfectly inchoated. Glanville, Pre-erat. p. 159.

INCCHOATE. v. adj. [from the verb.] Begun;
entered upon.

Oh, that all the salots of God, in a comfortable sense of their inchoate blessedness could sing for joy.

Bp. Hall, Christ Myning, § 8.

Lingering sickness had in acceptable handling; and inchoate misfortunes lessening the horror of (that must-be-done) dying.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 25.

The proportion of the imperfect, inchoate, very moderate state of the Christian in this life.

Hammond, Works, iv. 503.

INCCHOATELY. v. adv. [from inchoate.] In chotions or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving.

Hale, Orig. of Morality.

I consider a double estate of the learned; in- choation, and progress.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 38.

I take much contentment in this inchoation of friendship.

Hewitt, Lett. ii. 32.

There is another life, in which those divine inchotions shall be completed.

Glanville, Sermon, p. 281.

INCCHOATIVE. v. adj. [inchoative, Fr. incho- ativus, Lat.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

These acts of our intellect seem to be some inchoative or imperfect rays.

W. Montague, Diss. Est. P. i. (1648), p. 387.

To INCIDE. v. a. [from incido, to cut,
Lat.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm.

Quincy.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages.

Arbuthnot.

INCIDENT. n. s. [incido, to fall, Lat.]

INCIDENT. v. incidence. Fr.

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence.
In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact.

Quincy.
In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye.

Bacon.
He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incision of his happiness.

Norris.
In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed.

Newton, Opticks.
The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays.

2. [Incidents, Lat.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

INCIDENT. v. adj. [incident, Fr. incidents,
Lat.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incidents necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered.

Hobbes.
I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incidents occurrences.

Watson.
In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved; Julius, whose surname was Cesar, overcame Pompey; bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition.

Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of.

South.

To INCLIP.† v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt have't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To INCLIPSTER.† v. a. [encloster, Fr. See To ENCLOSE.] To shut up in a cloister.

Such a beatific face
Inclips here this narrow floor,
That posset all hearts before. Lovelace's Luc. p. 47.

To INCLOSE.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson takes no notice of this way of writing enclose; which, however, it very common; and which he has often used himself; though certainly enclose is more correct, from its French origin, enclos.] To part from things or grounds common by a fence; to surround; to shut in. See To ENCLOSE.

A garden inclosed is my sister. Cantic. iv. 12.

INCLOSE.† n. s. [from inclose.] One that encloses. See ENCLOSE.

A most unconscionable incloser and usurpator. Dran Martin, Lett. (1662), p. 23.

INCLOSURE.† See ENCLOSE.

To INCLOU.D.† v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

The heavens on ev'ry side enclosed be. Spenser, Fairfax's Gnat.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclosed,
And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakespeare.

To INCLU'DE.† v. a. [include, Lat.]

1. To inclose; to shut in; as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty,
It liked her to include the same within one intire lease. Bacon.

The marvellous fact includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLUSION.† n. s. [inclusio, Lat.] The act of including.

INCLU.SIVE.† [inclusiv, Fr.]

1. Including; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must rouse my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number; as, from Wednesday to the sum or number: inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLUSIVELY.† adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differentiated partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To INCOACH.† See To ENCOACH.

INCOACT.† adj. [incoactus, Lat.] UN-INCOACTED.† constrained. See CO-ACTED.

Bullockar, and Culex.

INCOAGULABLE.† adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE.† n. s. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G.† adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incoгато, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—

"Some words are hitherto not fairly split, and therefore only in their way to perfection; as inco, and plenis; but in a short time, it is to be hoped, they will be further docked to inc, and plen." Tatler, No. 230.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCOGITABLE.† adj. [Lat. incogitabilis.] Unthought of.

The most flagitious, incogitable fact. Dran King, Sermon 5 Nov. 1608, p. 31.

INCOGITANCY.† n. s. [incogitancia, Lat.] Want of thought.

It cannot argue any want of judgement in the author, but meer incogitancy only.

Ferrand on Luc Melanch. (1640), p. 112.

Which action, done out of a sudden incogitancy, might pass for but a weakness. South, Sermon, vii. 211.

One man's fancies are laws to successors, who afterwards mistake all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partly and piece-meal consideration. Decoy of Petty.

INCOGITANT.† adj. [incogitans, Latin.] Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

His first example said, "It is a just law that every one shall peacefully enjoy his estate in lands or otherwise." Does this law stain to no good end? The law will blush at this most incogitant woodcock. Milton, Coleridge.

Men are careless and incogitant, and fall into the pit of destruction before they are aware. Goodman, Writ. En. Conf. P. II.

INCOGITANTLY.† adv. [from incogitant.] Without consideration.

Some do not act impudently or incogitantly before the prayers, and fasting to the validation of Paul and Barnabas.

Knockbush's Annot. Tr. p. 146.

Men almost as often speak incogitantly, as they think silently. Barrow, Sermon on St. James ii. 3.

INCOGITATIVE.† adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Truly material beings, as clippings of our boards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCIGNITO, adv. [incognitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — We borrow the term from the Italian incognito; the great men of which country were fond of travelling, or walking about, in disguise.] In a state of concealment.

Two long ago
Since gods come down incognito. Prior.

The prince royal of Prussia came thither incognito. Taylor, No. 12.

He designs to stay there incognito a few days.

Rp. Berkeley, Letter to T. Prior, (7113).

INCIPHERCY, n. s. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incipherance of the parts do both make them to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass.

Boyle.

2. Want of connection; incongruity; in-consequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, abridges the incipherance of the arguments better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incipherance in matter, and suppositions without proof, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCIPHERENT, adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter wherewith they consist continued loose and incipherent, they had consequently been as perilous as those of marble or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incipherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

3. Not suitable to; not agreeing.

Two incipherent and inciphering dispositions.

Milton, Dect. and Disc. of Div. l. 10.

INCIPHERENTLY, adv. [from incipherent.]

INCONSEQUENTLY. In the initiation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incipherently.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOLUMITY, n. s. [incolumis, Fr. incolumitas, Lat.] Safety; security. A word very little in use.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

The parliament is necessary to, assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Hewitt.

TO INCUMBER. * See TO ENCUMBER, and TO INCUMBER. Barret and Sherwood write it incumber.

TO INCUMBER, v. n. [in and combine.]

To differ; not to agree.

To sow the narrow of man's nativity with seed of two incumberent and incumbering dispositions.

Milton, Dect. and Disc. of Div. l. 10.

INCUMBUSTIBILITY, n. s. [from incum-bustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incumbustibility. Ray.

INCUMBUSTIBLE, adj. [incumbustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incumbustible, and not consumable by fire. Watts.

INCUMBUSTIBLENESS, n. s. [from incum-bustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCUMET, n. s. [in and come. Sax.]

INCUMET, to come in, to enter.]

1. Revenue; produce of any thing.

Those who repine at the plenty of dry neighbourhood, and the greatness of his incumet, consider that we are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford

So large an incumet to the village lord.

Dryden, Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no incumet but what arises from its trade; the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incumet ascribed to some few of her preferences, this church hath in the whole little to submit on. Atterbury.

2. Coming-in; admission; introduction. Not now in use. It was a favourite expression in Cromwell's time.

He that walks up unto that light, and improves that strength, which God hath already communicated unto him, shall have more abundant incumet of light and strength from God.

Rp. Rust, Dect. of Truth, § 17.

Every humour and fantastick unaccountable motion was, by some, represented as the work of that Spirit to which they were most opposite: thus when warm and brisk sanguis presented a cheerful scene, and filled the imagination with pleasant dreams; these were divine illapses, the joys and incumet of the Holy Ghost!

Glennville, Serm. iii. p. 178.

This hath been commonly experimented by the devotees of all religions; for even among the devoutest Turks and Heathens we may find as notorious instances of those incumet and enlargements, as in any of our modern histories of Christian experience.

Scott, Works, li. 129. (edit. 1718.)

INCUMING, adj. [from incumet; incumet, Sax.] Coming in.

It is the first and fundamental interest of the labourer, that the farmer should have a full incumet from the product of his labour.

Burke, Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

INCUMENSURABILITY, n. s. [from incum-ensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

Mr. W. Warner made an inverted logarithmical table, whereas Briggs's table fills his margin with numbers, increasing by unities, and answered to them sets their logarithms, which, because of incumensurability, must needs be either abundant or deficient. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. § 79.

INCUMENSURABLE, adj. [French, from in, con, and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incumensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to the weakness of our nature.

Watts.

INCUMENSURATE, adj. [in, con, and mensura, Lat.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrat, which, to our apprehension, are incumensurable, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. Mora.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incumensurable to one another, for civil use, measuring the greatest by the least. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehended days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend the less, though the less space be incumensurable to the greater. Holder on Time.

INCUMESTURE, n. s. [in and commis-ture.] The state of being unmix'd.

In what parity and incumesture the language of that people stood, which were casually discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, no longer ago than in the time of Duke D'Alva, we have not met with a good account farther than that their words were Basquish or Cantabrian.

Sir T. Brown, Mucell, p. 155.

TO INCOMMEDIATE, v. a. [incom-mo, Lat. incommode, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

Neither know I whether is more hard to manage of the two; a dejected estate, or prosperous; whether we may be more incommode with a rusty horse, or with a tired one.

By. Hall of Contentment, § 9.

Temporal pressures and adversities—may sometimes incommode the man, yet can never reach the saint; and, though they disturb the carter, can never come at the jewel. South, Serm. vi. 154.

A goat planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is that of indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMODATION, n. s. [from incommo-date.] Inconvenience.

What incommodation is that, after the brisk active heat of the sun in the day-time, to have the variety of the more mild beams of the moon.

Annal. on Glennville, Sec. (1689), p. 115.

INCOMMUMENT, n. s. [from incommo-date.] Inconvenience.

I persisted in my ordinary course of living and business, though with severe incommement.

Chapman, Eng. Melody, (1758), p. 315.

INCOMMODOUS, adj. [incommodus, Lat.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience does ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodous to a few. Hobbes.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood without frequent explanations and incommodous interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY, adv. [from incommo-dious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

I told how myself had stood so incommodously by means of the great price, as I heard it not well. Harrington, Rp. View of the Ch. (1655), p. 190.

INCOMMODOUSNESS, n. s. [from incommo-dious.] Inconvenience.

Dissens, disorders, and the incommodousness of external nature, are incommensurable with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMUNITY, n. s. [incommunitas, Lat.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommensurability you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser on Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without ever great chafe, or other incommensurability, the chafes doth make the compound still profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region end the wide, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommensurability of smok. Wotton, Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. s. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

The incommunicability of this piece with many out of his church. Hales, Rev. p. 181.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. King Charles.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glanville.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was not supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Stillingfleet.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither do we treat them with such peculiarity of favour, till the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, and also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reverence to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMUNICABLENESS. n. s. [from incommunicable.] The state or quality of not being impartible.

As by honouring him, we acknowledge him God, so by the incommunicableness of honour we acknowledge him one God. Mede, Apol. of the Lat. Times, p. 33.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hobbes on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATED. adj. [in and communicated.] Not imparted.

Excellencies, so far as we know, incommunicated to any creature. Mercy, Antid. against Idol. ch. 2.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgements and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating heads, or by provincial legislatures. Hale, Common Law.

INCOMMUTABLE. adj. [in and commutable.] Unchangeable; not subject to change. Bullocker.

INCOMMUTABILITY. n. s. [from incommutable.] The state or quality of being unchangeable.

This order, by its own incommutability, keeps all things mutable within their several ranks and conditions, which otherwise would run into confusion. Trencl. of Boethius, (Oxf. 1674, p. 187.

INCOMPACT. adj. [in and compact.]

INCOMPACTED. adj. Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompact. Beylie.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were To an unstrife and constant goodness. Shakespeare, Timon.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Now this man

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night Made it a fool and beggar. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLENESS. n. s. [from incomparable.] Excellence beyond comparison; the state or quality of being incomparable. Scott.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest men that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Paganus, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPARER. adj. [in and compared.]

Unmatched; peerless.

That Misanthrope's incomparer spirit, Whose grandeur now is set in highest place. Spenser, Sonnet to Sir F. Walsingham.

INCOMPASSION. n. s. [in and compassion.]

Want of compassion or pity.

We are full of incompassion; — we have little fellow-feeling of their griefs. Sp. Sermon's Sermon. (1681, p. 148.

INCOMPASSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.]

Void of pity; void of tenderness. Sherwood.

Peruse the sea in my afflicted state

Peruse than her less incompassionate. Sherburne's Lydian, (Pueris, 1651.)

INCOMPASSIONATELY. adv. [from incompassionate.]

Without pity or compassion.

INCOMPASSIONATENESS. n. s. [from incompassionate.]

Want of tenderness or pity.

The incompassionateness of other great men which were merciless, cruel, and hard-hearted. Granger on Eccles. (1631, p. 94.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. s. [incompatibility, Fr. properly incompatibility, in and compato, Lat.

And accordingly Hammond writes it incompatibility.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one influence above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

The incompatibility of true faith with carnal desires. Hammond, Works, iv. 604.

INCOMPATIBLE. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompatible, as it is sometimes written; in and compato, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Beattie.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Beattie.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompatibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [from incompatible, from incompatible.]

Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. s. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.]

Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.]

Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issue, upon false and incompetent pretence, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimacy. Bacon.

Every speech does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to perceive the gross faults of others. Gower, of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal in an attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is no incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Beattie.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.]

Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.]

Not perfect; not finished.

It pleases him to mercy to account himself incomplete, and maided without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrong ourselves, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. s. [from incomplete.]

Imperfection; unfinished state.

He — supplies what her incompleteness went seeking.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Dis. To the Part.
The incompleteness of our unhappy love's happiness, in his frictions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intrinse possession.

Hogel.

INCOMPLEX.* adj. [in and complex; in-complex, Fr.] Complicated; opposed to simple.

Otherwise it is unintelligible, how any incomplete thing (in they speak) can be the complete or immediate object of belief. Burrow, Works ii. 55.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. s. [in and compliance].

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-coercion produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent.

Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God.

Rogers.

INCOMPOSED.* adj. [in and composed].

Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Howell. Two of our best poets have finely employed the word.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones.

Howell.

Thus Satan; and him thus the snatch old, With faltering steps and visage incomposed.

Milton, P. L. ii. 989.

Answer'd. To the middle droops

The strong laborious ox, of bonnet front,

Which incomposed he shakes. Thomson, Summer.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. s. [from impossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The insupportable impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitness in any modification.

Marr.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things, succession or extensiveness with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, than arises from individuals already actually distinguished.

Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY.* n. s. [from imprehen-sibilis, Fr. from imprehen-sibilis.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

The constant, universal sense of all antiquity unanimously conferring an imprehen-sibility in many of the articles of the Christian faith.

South, Sermon ii. 217.

The plea of difficulty, and even imprehen-sibility, may be urged.

Professor White's Sermon. Notes, p. 3.

IMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [from imprehen-sibilis, Fr. in and comprehensible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing imprehen-sible rewards as an eternal weight of glory.

Hammond.

Stars that seem to roll

Spaces imprehen-sible.

Milton, P. L.

One thing there is imprehen-sible in this matter.

Locke.

The laws of vegetation, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners imprehen-sible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an in-sensible and imprehen-sible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended?

Hobbes.

IMPREHENSIBILITIES. n. s. [from imprehen-sibilis.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's imprehen-sibilities: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is imprehen-sible.

Watts.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from imprehen-sibilis.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is imprehen-sibly infinite.

Locke.

IMPREHENSION.* n. s. [in and comprehension.] Want of comprehension.

These impressions and impressions.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

IMPREHENSIVE.* adj. [in and comprehensive.] Not extensive.

A most imprehen-sive and incomplete title; for this edition, the last and the best, contains the three first as well as the three last books.

Watson, Hist. Eng. Port. iv. 4.

IMPREPRESSIBLE. adj. [from impre-sible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is impre-sible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted.

Cygn.

IMPREPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from impre-sible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

IMPRECURRING. adj. [in and concurr.] Not concurring.

1. Unlearned; artless. This sense is uncertain.

2. In Scotland it denotes mischievously unlucky; as, he's an inco'nv fellow.

This seems to be the meaning in Shak- spere. Dr. Johnson.—There is no such expression in the north of England as inco'nv, as Mr. Ritson observes; or in Scotland, as we may gather from Dr.
Jamieson's not noticing the word in his Scottish Dictionary. It is a cant expression, frequent in our old plays, denoting not a mischievously unlucky person, but an accomplished one, in a sneering sense; as we say, a fine fellow!

O my troth, most sweet jests, most inco'nv ruler wit, when it comes so smoothly off.

Shakspere.

O superdainty canon, viceroy inco'nv!

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

A cockcomb incense, but that he wants money.

Comedy of Dicks, Dotyplot, (1600).

INCO'RPORAL adj. [in and corporal, old Fr.; incorporel.] Immaterial; distinct from matter; distinct from body.

The table of man hath his ends and terms a spiritual alteration incorporel.

Ep. Gard. Etyd. of Cult. Faith, (1551), fol. 109.

Why dost thou bend thine eye on vacancy,
And with the incorporeal star dost hold discourse?

Shakspere.

Learned men have not resolved as whether light be corporal or incorporeal; corporal they say it cannot be, because then it would neither pierce the air, nor solid diaphanous bodies, and yet every day we see the air lightened: incorporeal it cannot be, because sometimes it affecteth the sight with offence. Ralph.

INCO'RPORALITY n. s. [incorporelité, Fr.;
from incorporeal.] Immaterialness; distinctness from body.

INCO'RPORALLY adv. [from incorporeal.]

Without matter; immaterially.

TO INCO'RPORATE v. a. [incorporer,
Fr.]

1. To mingle different ingredients so as they shall make one mass.

Who the swelling clouds in bladders ties,
To mollify the stubborn clods with rain,

And scatter'st dust incorporate again? Saunders.

2. To conjoin inseparably, as one body.

By your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy church incorporate two in one. Shaksp.

Upon my knees
I charm you, by that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shaksp.

3. To form into a corporation, or body political. In this sense they say in Scotland the incorporate trades in any community.

The apostle affirmeth plainly, of all men christian, that they be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporated into one company, they all make but one body. Hooker.

The same is incorporated with a majority, and nameth burgesses to parliament.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

4. To unite; to associate.

The Romans did not subdue a country to put the inhabitants to fire and sword, but to incorporate them into their own community.

Adams, Freeholder.

5. To work into another mass. See IN-
CORPORATE, adj.

6. To embody; to give a material form.

Courtesy, that seemed incorporated in his heart, would not be persuaded by danger to offer any offence. Silvius.

The idolaters, who worshipped their images as gods, supposed some spirit to be incorporated therein, and so to make together with it a person fit to receive worship.

Stillingsfleet.

TO INCO'RPORATE v. n.

1. To unite with something else. It is commonly followed by with.

Painters colours and whet do better incorporate with oil. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is not universally true, that acid salts and oils will not incorporate or mingle. Boyle.

Thy soul
In real darkness of the body dwells,
Shut out from outward light,
To incorporate with gloomy night. Milton, S. A.

2. Sometimes it has into.

It finds the mind unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily gains upon the assent, grows up with it, and incorporates into it.

South.

INCO'RPORATE † participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Mixed together.

A sufficient part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw to it the less.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Conjoined inseparably, as one body.

Villainous thoughts, Rodrigo, when these mutualities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Thou art then estranged from thyself:

Thyself I call it, being strange to me,

That undividable incorporate,

Am better than thy dear self's better part.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

Death and I

Am found eternal, and incorporate both.

Milton, P. L.

3. Associated.

It is Casca, non incorporate

To our attempts.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

True is it, non incorporate friendship.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. Worked into another mass.

All this learning is ignoble and mechanical among them, and the Confucian only essential and incorporate in their government.

Temple.

5. Unbodied; immaterial. Now dissolved, in order to avoid confusion; incorporate being, as before stated, used of things mingled.

Moses forbore to speak of angels, and things invisible and incorporate.

Rabbi.

INCORPORATE.† n. s. [incorporation, Fr. from incorporate.]

1. Union of divers ingredients in one mass.

Make proof of the incorporation of iron mass first; for if it can be incorporated without over great charge, the cheapness of the flint doth make the compound stuff profitable.

Bacon.

This, with some little addition, may further the intrinsic incorporation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Formation of a body politic.

3. Adoption; union; association: with into.

In time we actually are, by our actual incorporation that society which hath him for their head.

Hooker.

4. Without into.

He does not only invite us to come to him, but to come within him; not only to an embrace, but to an union; and by ineffable and superlucous incorporations for "us to be in him," and for "him to be in us."

South, Sermon, p. 141.

INCORPoreal.† adj. [incorporalis, Lat. in- + corporel.] Immaterial; unbodied.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few.

Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms

Reduce'd their shapes immense.

Milton, P. L.

Sense and perception must necessarily proceed from some incorporeal substance within us.

Bentley.

INCORPOREALLY.† adv. [from incorporeal.] Immaterially; without body.

Hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses, and more incorporeally than the smelling.

Bacon.

INCORPORITY.† n. s. [in and corporcity.]

Skill new must be costs before our body.

And now derives our pro'd incorporate.

Moss, Song of the Soul, iii. l. 5.

Incommunicable attributes of the Deity appeared to agree thereto; such, as infinity, immutability, indivisibility, incorporeity.

Rp. Berkeley, Siris, § 270.

The first stumbling-block to the ancient philosophers, and what no one could get over, was, to conceive an incorporeity, any thing entirely void of matter.

Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 394.

To INCORPSE. v. a. [in and corpse.] To incorporate; to unite into one body. Not used.

He grew unto his seat,

As he had been incorp'd and deny-natur'd

With the brave horse.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INCORRECT.† adj. [in and correct.]

1. Not nicely finished; not exact; inaccurate; full of faults. The present usage.

The piece you think is incorrect: why take it; I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it.

Pope.

2. Not duly regulated; not corrected into proper obedience. See INCORRECTION. Not now in use.

It's unmanly grief;

It shows a will most incorrect to heaven;

A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;

An understanding simple and unschool'd.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INCORRECTION.† n. s. [from incorrect.] Want of correction.

The untaught wrong or incorrection of ill nature maketh one odious.

Arctandemon Arctany, Trak. of Moderat. (1661.) p. 9.

INCORRECTLY.† adv. [from incorrect.] Inaccurately; not exactly.

And if they had not had the Gospel in their hands, they would have wrote as loosely and incorrectly as the philosophers before them.

Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 16.

INCORRECTNESS.† n. s. [in and correctness.] Inaccuracy; want of exactness.

Many of these petty incorrectnesses are not, however, to be imputed to Froivart.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. Dissert. p. lxxvii.

INCORRIGIBLE.† adj. [incorrigible, Fr. in and corrigible.]

1. Bad beyond correction; depraved beyond amendment by any means; erroneous beyond hope of instruction; of persons.

Protrud'd by those incorrigible fools,

I left declaiming in pedantic schools.

Dryden, Jun.

Whilst we are incorrigible, God may in vengeance continue to chastise us with the judgement of war.

Swalbridge.

The most violent party-men are such as have discarded least sense of religion or morality; and when such are laid aside, as shall be found incorrigible, it will be no difficulty to reconcile the rest.

Bayly.

2. Not capable of amendment: of things.

The loss is many times incorrigible, and the inconvenience incorrigible.

More, Distinct Dialogues.

What are their thoughts of things, but variety of incorrigible error?

L'Estrange.
